U. S. May Send Advisers to Help Formosa

Joint Chiefs Devise Plan To Aid China Against Reds

Draft Plan on Urgent Representations of MacArthur; Idea Is Sent to Acheson

By Bert Andrews
NYHT News Service

President Truman, it was learned yesterday, has instructed his top military advisers to get busy and spell out a "positive" policy on Asia.

As a preliminary step, a new plan of action has been recommended by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, on the basis of urgent representations from Gen. Douglas MacArthur, to help the Chinese Nationalists prevent the Communists from taking over Formosa.

Other probable steps are expected to include:

1. Recommendation of methods for strengthening the hand held by the French through the presence of 180,000 crack troops in French Indo-China;

2. Possible extension of Economic Cooperation Administration aid to areas where it could be expected to do the most good.

Interest in Formosa

The preparation of a new plan concerning Formosa attracted the most immediate interest.

It envisions the sending of American military and civilian advisers to Formosa, as they were sent to Greece, in the hope of enabling the Chinese Nationalists to stand on their own feet against any Communist invasion.

The theory is that with such expert help the Nationalists could so utilize their forces, including some 250 planes and a sizable navy, to withstand an invasion.

The plan, now on the desk of Secretary of State Dean Acheson, marks another swing in sentiment among the joint chiefs.

Smith Urged Occupation

Senator H. Alexander Smith, Republican, of New Jersey, returning from a trip to the Orient as a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, urged on December 1 that the United States occupy Formosa to save it from being lost to the Communists.

This was in line with General MacArthur's views that loss of the island to Communists would be unthinkable because it would threaten the American lifeline of island bases from Japan through Okinawa to the Philippines.

Senator Smith's statement ran head-on into unofficial word that the joint chiefs had decided Formosa was not of vital strategic importance to the United States and the State Department consequently

Seventh Cabinet In Year's Time Formed in Syria

Damascus, Syria, Dec. 28 (AP).—A new cabinet was formed today to run the Syrian government. It was the nation's seventh in a year marked by successive military coups and political unrest.

The new premier, Khaled Bey Azem, was also premier of the cabinet with which Syria started the year.

The Populist Party, strongest group in the Assembly, has four ministries. It had seven in the last previous cabinet, which was formed Christmas Eve and resigned 23 hours later because the cabinet's views did not coincide with the army's concerning the debated proposal for a union of Syria and Iraq.

Hungarians Gave Him Grilling Around Clock, Jacobson Says

Vienna, December 28 (U.P.).—Israel Jacobson, 37-year-old American relief official freed after 13 days in Hungarian and Soviet custody, said today police grilled him around the clock with bright lights shinging in his eyes.

The lights were so bright and so constant, he said, that he did not know night from day.

Jacobson, of Rochester, N. Y., who headed the United States Joint Distribution Committee in Hungary, described his ordeal to newspapermen after he arrived here and was questioned by American officials. He still was a bit pale and shaky, and said he was "never so scared in my life."

Jacobson said political police had attempted to make him admit he belonged to an alleged American espionage ring in Hungary. He was seized by Hungarian police December 15 and held incommunicado on "suspicion" of espionage.

Jacobson said that during the first week he was in custody he was questioned 20 hours a day and was nearly starved.

He said relays of police questioned him about his connections with numerous persons he did not know, including Robert A. Vogeler, American manager of the International Telephone & Telegraph Co. in eastern Europe. Vogeler has been held by the Hungarians for almost six weeks on espionage charges.

Jacobson said he was forced to sit upright and face a strong light for 20 hours a day, and that often he was on the verge of collapse.

Jacobson was released and ex-

Gasoline Station Employe Booked On Assault Charge

Raymond L. Schaal, 50, 6405 Allegany ave., Takoma Park, Md., a filling station attendant, yesterday was charged with assault and battery and indecent exposure by Prince Georges County police at Hyattsville, Md.

Schaal, a veteran of World War I, was arrested by Prince Georges County Policeman Emmett F. Gray following complaint by the parents of a 10-year-old girl.

Police said that Schaal was a patient at Perry Point Veterans' Hospital for six months in 1947 after he attempted three times to commit suicide. He is married and has three children. He was released on $3000 bond

Non-Resident Hospital Care Solution Found

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

The Hospital Service Agency yesterday agreed to take care of non-resident indigents in Washington private hospitals.

The agreement was announced after a conference called by Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, District health officer, of both public and private health and hospital officials and Community Chest representatives.

Dr. Seckinger said the conferees had worked out a "complete agreement" covering the knotty problem of whether a person unable to pay his hospital bill and not a District resident is a charge of a public or private hospital. The problem was highlighted recently by transfer of an indigent patient from a private hospital to Gallinger.

In the future, Dr. Seckinger said, such a situation will be met as follows:

1. Private hospital resident physicians will be responsible for reporting the transfer of patients to the admitting officer at Gallinger Hospital.

2. If a residency question is involved, the Hospital Permit Bureau service in Gallinger will be brought in. If Gallinger cannot accept the patient because of the residence requirement, the admitting office will confer with HSA, which will assume care of the non-resident indigent.

Dr. P. A. E. Stebbing, Gallinger Hospital superintendent, said earlier that making interns responsible for transfers between

Nanking Observation

Russian Technicians Stream Into China, Newsman Reports

(Chang Kuo-sin, United Press bureau manager in Nanking when the Communists occupied that city on April 24, has made his way overland to Hongkong after eight months under Communist rule.—Editor's note.)

By Chang Kuo-sin

Hongkong, Dec. 28 (U.P.).—Russian military and technical advisers are arriving in Communist-held China by the hundreds to help the Peiping government Sovietize the country and, it appears, to plan invasion of Formosa.

The Russians also are seeking to fit Communist-held China into the political—and military—bloc of countries which now extends from the Danube River to the Pacific.

The growing Soviet influence on China was one of the most striking changes I witnessed during the eight months I spent in Communist China—though, restricted as I was, I did not see the Russians in operation myself.

Communists, non-Communist members of the Peiping government and private engineers and technicians who worked with the Russians told me of the growth of Soviet influence.

Additional reports of Russian activities appeared in the controlled Chinese press and in broad-

Fungi Found Growing in All Cancers

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

New York, N. Y., Dec. 28—A Philadelphia woman scientist reported here today that she has found fungus organisms in every type of cancer she has examined by a new staining technique.

The tests included 20 human cancer tumors, of four kinds, and 100 cancer tumors in mice, she said.

Dr. Irene Corey Diller of the New Institute for Cancer Research, Fox Chase, near Philadelphia, warned, however, against jumping to any premature conclusion that either any or all cancers are caused by fungus.

It is possible, she admitted, that the fungus merely finds the cancer tumor an ideal lodging site, and has nothing whatever to do with its start or growth.

Not in Healthy Animals

However, she reported, the fungus has not been uncovered in healthy control animals or non-cancerous human tissues, with the exception of a laboratory strain of mice known to develop breast cancer in almost 100 percent of the cases.

Two types of fungi have been found, she reported. The first, alternaria, is one of the invisible plants common in local soil and in milk products.

Adding further mystery, however, was the second type uncovered, syncephalastrum racemosum, an imperfect type which still needs further identification but which has been described as common to the tropics. How a tropical fungus was found in Philadelphia cancer patients is as unexplainable as how important the new findings are to the search for cancer's cause and cure, said Dr. Diller.

Dr. Diller said she and her colleagues at the New Institute are continuing to study the phenomenon, financed largely by funds from the American Cancer Society. With Dr. D. R. Wharton, of Philadelphia, she said, immunological tests are being made to determine whether animal systems build up antibodies against the organisms.

Much Work Still Needed

"It's much too early to report on this work," she declared, adding that the initial findings were being reported here at the 116th annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science so that other scientists might apply their specialized skills to the research.

"A great deal of further work must be done before any definite conclusions can be drawn," she declared.

For five years, beginning in 1895, cancer research was spurred with reports by many investigators of the isolation of fungi from tumor tissue. But accounts were so garbled and the life histories so confused with those of other organisms that the idea of a parasitic cause to cancer fell into disrepute, Dr. Diller explained.

Dr. Diller also disclosed that injections of fresh syncephalastrum brought death to cancer-susceptible mice in from four to six days. Its virulence decreases as it is grown in culture, but even after several generations of growth outside the body the fungi still will produce inflammatory lesions in mice.

The human cancer cases in-

Dewey Ends All Hope for Presidency

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 28 (U.P.).—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, twice defeated as Republican candidate for President, announced today that he never would try again to occupy the White House.

In declaring that he would not try again for the Presidency, he said, "My statement applies to 1952, '56 and '60—if I live that long."

His announcement wrote finis to a campaign for the Presidency that began a decade ago—in 1940—when the late Wendell L. Willkie defeated him for the GOP nomination.

Emphatic in His Stand

The Governor was the Republican standard-bearer in 1944, when the late Franklin D. Roosevelt trimmed him handily, and in 1948, when President Truman, staging a vigorous campaign was an upset winner. Emphatic in his stand that he will not again seek the Presidency, Dewey gave no hint, however, whether he would seek a third term as Governor. He said he would discuss that at a later date.

He made it known that he would like to take up the role of "elder statesman" with a strong influence in shaping Republican policy. To that end, he removed himself as a possible candidate so that party leaders would not interpret future declarations as selfish.

Dewey told a press conference that he had informed supporters in various sections of the country that under no circumstances would he again become the party's candidate for President.

He cited a recent letter to his former Oregon campaign manager, John Higgins, in which he said nothing could arise in the present or in the future to make him change his mind.

"That statement is as definite as the English language can make it," the Governor added.

Calls Reports "Untruthful"

Dewey described as "untruthful" published reports that he planned to retire from politics temporarily and then make another bid for the Presidency in 1956 or 1960.

"My statement applies to 1952, 56 and 60—if I live that long," the Governor continued.

Reporters were prompted to question Dewey about his political future when he disclosed the appointment of his counsel, Charles Breitel, to a $28,000-a-year State Supreme Court justiceship (First Judicial District).

Dewey said no political significance could be drawn from Brietel's appointment. He explained that the late President Roosevelt and former Gov. Herbert H. Lehman appointed their counsels to the Supreme Court.

Both, however, acted near the end of their terms.

Sen. Morse Warns GOP Against Isolationism

By Robert C. Albright

Senator Wayne Morse (R., Oreg.) yesterday warned against a resurgence of isolationism in the Republican Party as GOP critics resumed their attack on Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg's bid for more bipartisan foreign policy cooperation.

Morse challenged the foreign policy views of Senate Republican Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (Nebr.) and called on Republicans instead to follow the bipartisan course laid down by Vandenberg.

He called Wherry's counter "non-partisan" foreign policy proposal

Test Is 'Overwhelming'

Deaf May Hear Via Fingertips Through Use of New Apparatus

By a Post Reporter

New York, Dec. 28—Preliminary development of a new device to give hearing through the fingers to the totally deaf and speech as well to deaf mutes, was announced here today.

Existence of the nameless instrument was made public by Dr. Norbert Wiener, one of the world's foremost mathematicians, at today's session of the 116th meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Dr. Wiener described the device in its present stage as housed in a red cardboard container about the size of the ordinary breadbox. Eventually it is planned to incorporate it within a slightly flexed glove, an inconspicuous hearing aid for those who today have no hearing.

Already, he said, it has given a "hearing experience" to some totally deaf persons, and an "overwhelming" improvement in enunciation to a blind, deaf mute, previously incoherent.

Dr. Wiener, professor of mathematics at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, elaborated on the apparatus at an AAAS press conference. His partner in its joint development is Dr. Jerome Wiesner, MIT professor of electrical engineering.

The "sound vibration communicator" consists of an ordinary microphone, like lapel button microphones; filters to break soundwaves down into varied frequencies, and vibrating electrodes for the fingertip contacts. The vibrators pulse to the filtered soundwave frequencies to form the new hearing sense for the nervous system.

"It's something like Braille for the deaf," said Dr. Wiener, "only, instead of using space for the medium, as Braille does, we use time (time intervals in the vibrations)."

After arduous training, he said, the totally deaf acquire a vocabulary to speech vibrations which substitute for normal hearing. And deaf mutes, once they learn the vibratory sound of speech, can pattern their own sounds to talk, he added.

Most of the experimental work was done on persons with normal hearing, their ears filled with dinning sounds to temporarily block out that channel of communication.

Such persons, used to normal

Lewis Faces Charges Of 'Unfair' Practices In 3-Day Mining Week

Southern Operators File Case With NLRB Counsel; Violation of T-H Act Is Alleged

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

A major group of coal operators yesterday charged John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers with unfair labor practices and asked for quick relief through a temporary injunction.

The charges were filed here by the Southern Coal Producers Association, representing one-sixth of the annual tonnage produced by the Nation's bituminous mines, with the office of Robert N. Denham, general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board.

"In Complete Accord"

Meanwhile, George N. Love, spokesman for Northern and Western operators, said at Pittsburgh that "we are in complete accord with this action and our attorneys are preparing similar charges which will be filed at the earliest possible moment."

Love charged that Lewis' efforts to "coerce the coal operators into signing his infamous and illegal 'blank check' contract" had failed but that they had placed "a serious coal crisis at the Nation's doorstep."

The Southern operators filed the charges under the Taft-Hartley Act with documents supporting the alleged violations of the management-labor relations law. In essence, the charges accused John L. and the miners' union of refusing to bargain in good faith over a new contract; and of using coercion, through the three-day work week, to force the operators to accept an illegal contract.

Field Investigation Next

Denham immediately referred the charges to the Baltimore regional office of NLRB for investigation by field representatives. Should the director of the Baltimore regional office then determine that the operators' charges have merit, he will issue a complaint. On the basis of this complaint, General Counsel Denham may, at his discretion, seek a temporary injuction against the union until the charges are tried and judged by the National Labor Relations Board.

Just how broad the injunction, if granted, would be is a matter for the court to decide.

The injunction might order John L. Lewis and the UMW to bargain in good faith with the Southern Producers Association, and cease

She's 'Princess Yasmin'

5½-Pound Girl Born to Rita; Both 'Doing Extremely Well'

Lausanne, Switzerland, Dec. 28 (AP).—A 5½-pound princess was born today to screen star Rita Hayworth and her husband of seven months, the Moslem Prince Aly Khan. Happily, Aly announced: "Yes, everybody is all right."

Claude Payot, handling the baby's public relations, said tonight both mother and daughter are "doing extremely well, despite a long and difficult birth."

Congratulations streamed in upon the parents.

The child was named Yasmin, the Moslem word for the jasmine flower from which perfume is made in southern France, where her parents were married May 27 after an international romance.

"She is a very gracious, delightful little girl with harmonious features and tiny wisps of black hair," said Miss Olga Besson, head nurse of the exclusive Montchoisi Clinic.

She is the first granddaughter of the wealthy Aga Khan, who is worshipped by five million Ismaili Moslems as an earthly god. Aly is heir to the title of Aga Khan. He has two sons and Rita has a daughter by previous marriages. Rita had hoped for a son; Aly for a daughter "to be just as beautiful and lovely" as the mother.

The prince told newsmen weeks ago that seven-month babies were common in his family and he expected the newcomer might be premature. He and Rita came to Lausanne November 5 to await the birth.

Rita's time came in the night. She was clad in a mink coat for

Officers Must Teach Reserve Units 2 Years

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Defense Secretary Louis Johnson directed yesterday that all regular officers of the armed forces must serve at least two years as an instructor of a reserve unit during their military career.

He announced the step as a "move for unification" by better integrating the regular and reserve forces and making possible a quicker mobilization in time of emergency.

Pointing out that, in wartime, members of the civilian components make up the great bulk of the fighting forces, Johnson declared:

"For the professional military man in such a time to weld these components and our regular establishment together into the most effective fighting force, he must be intimately familiar with and understand the problems, state of training, and psychological outlook of the members of our civilian components."

"By the same token, our reservists urgently need the skilled guidance and supervision that only the professional military man can give."

Officials said the order undoubtedly will mean an increase in the number of regulars serving as instructors and a corresponding cut in the number of reservists serving in such billets on active duty.

General Electric To Break With UE As Contract Ends

New York, Dec. 28 (AP).—The General Electric Company announced tonight that it will break off contract relations with the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America when the present contract expires next April 1.

The union recently was expelled from the CIO on the ground that it was Communist-led. It now is engaged in a representation dispute with the CIO-sponsored International United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers.

George H. Pfeif, G.E. manager of union relations, said the contract cancellation notice was served because of this dispute.

Pfeif said in a letter to the former CIO union that "it would not be proper for us to run any risk of appearing to be unfairly favoring one side or the other by allowing our present national contract with the UE to be extended past its termination date on April 1, 1950."

Cowboy Tradition Defended By White-Haired D.C. Ex-Rider

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

An old cowhand from the Rio Potomac wandered into the staid halls of the Library of Congress yesterday and found himself rising to an eloquent defense of the American cowboy before the national meeting of the American Folklore Society.

George R. Laird, white-haired and 77, herded cattle in the last century in Kansas but now lives in retirement at 121 4th st. ne. He had ambled over to have a look at an exhibit at the library and heard about the meeting down the hall.

Professor Laird—for that he is, having taught English and public speaking, afterward doing a Chautauqua turn—decided to have a look. He walked in and settled himself in the front row, the better to hear.

Right sharply, pardner, did the ears of the old cowboy prick up when Mody C. Boatright of the University of Texas arose to give a speech entitled "The Cowboy as Folk Hero."

Now it so happens that Boatright is both a present professor and former cowboy himself and the last man in God's wide open spaces to cast a slur on the bowlegged rider of the herd.

The only distinction Boatright was making was that between the real men of the spur-heels and

Arms Race Seen

Javits Urges Policy Review On Near East

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

Representative Jacob K. Javits (R.-Lib., N. Y.) today called for a review of United States policy in the Near East where he said a "second round" in the Arab-Israeli war may be imminent.

Javits, who visited the Near East this year as a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, wrote Secretary of State Dean Acheson that British military shipments to the Arabs are forcing an arms race between the Jews and the Arabs. He said shipments are being made to Iraq, Jordan, Egypt and perhaps Syria.

"The arguments made to support arms shipments to the Arab states, aside from treaty arrangements, are, of course, that they are necessary to establish the morale of the Arab states as a buffer against further Communist expansion . . .

"Communist danger to the Near East would certainly increase the most in the confusion incident to a renewal of armed Arab action against Israel."

David E. Lilienthal hinted yesterday that when he ceases being a Federal official, he will urge taking a "new look" at the American plan for international control of atomic energy.

At a press conference, the resigning chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission declined to answer almost all questions on the subject of international control.

But to one such inquiry he replied that the question is one "I must defer talking about as long as I am an officer of the Government."

Later, a reporter asked him if he favored the appointment of a new commission, similar to the one he headed in 1946 that produced the famous Acheson-Lilienthal report, the basis for the present U. N. atomic control proposal. The new group, the questioner said, might "seek a fresh, constructive approach to this deadlocked control question."

'Ask Me That February 16'

Lilienthal thought a moment, smiled and said:

"Ask me that on the sixteenth of February," (the day after he resigns as AEC chairman).

Lilienthal admitted that the present U. N. control plan had, as a basis, a program drafted when hopes for world harmony were much higher. The implication was that now, with a changed situation, some other approach might be necessary. He pointedly observed that the Acheson-Lilienthal report was always considered only "a place to begin."

He said that "short-term" prospects for world agreement to outlaw atomic weapons were "remote." But, he added, "long-term" prospects were good." His basis for the latter belief, he said, was "faith," but a not entirely unsupported faith.

For, he pointed out, the knowledge that continuation on the present course means "clear, unambiguous, unmitigated catastrophe for everyone" is held by some people and is bound to spread to the rest.

Developments in 1949

Lilienthal was asked whether during 1949 there had been major developments or advances that necessitated reexamination or reconsideration of atomic affairs.

There were, he conceded, several "major advances," comparable to the development of the atomic "breeding" mechanism, a device that permits the manufacture of more atomic fuel than it contained at the beginning.

If secrecy were not so necessary, he said, private industry and research could have shared in these new advances. But, he added, "that is part of the price we pay for security."

Other Prices

The press conference itself illustrated some of the other prices we pay for security. For security reasons Lilienthal could not or would not answer repeated question about:

1. Any specific aspects or details of international control possibilities.
2. The forthcoming atomic tests at Eniwetok.
3. The progress, or lack of it, or the issues in current British-Canadian-United States negotiations on atomic partnership.
4. The "major advances" in atomic science made during the year.

At the news conference, the AEC issued a series of formal reports on the progress of its campaign to make as much nonsecret research information as possible available to the public.

The reports showed that 877 research papers were made public during the first 11 months of this year. They totaled 19,000 pages of new information in the fields of medicine, biology, chemistry, physics, engineering, mineralogy, metallurgy and ceramics.

The commission also revealed it has turned over to the U. S. Patent Office descriptions of 67 processes and devices which private industry may have for the asking on a non-royalty, nonexclusive basis.

Morse Scores Isolationism

just "a cloak behind which is hidden the weapon of isolationism," and said it did not reflect the views of a majority of Republicans.

The liberal Oregonian said a return to isolation would be "destructive of the welfare of both the Republican Party and the country as a whole."

At a press conference Tuesday Wherry said bipartisan foreign policy presupposed commitments in advance. He opposed any "united front" until issues have been debated and decided on the Senate floor. The result then would be a "nonpartisan" foreign policy, Wherry said. In a speech yesterday in Bedford, Ind., Senator William E. Jenner (R., Ind.) took much the same tack as Wherry.

Jenner said that "so-called bipartisan foreign policy has been nothing but a vicious left-handed weapon in the arsenal of Administration propaganda to booby-trap silence, and take the opposition into camp."

"The Far East debacle to which America's position has been reduced is a striking proof that bipartisan cooperation has been a one-way Administration street," the Hoosier Republican said.

"The masterminds of our global crusade (are) demanding that Republicans cooperate on their terms and support without question their secret commitments no matter how outrageous or suicidal they might be."

Hitting at Wherry's statement and the Jenner echo, Morse told a press conference:

"It is a source of deep regret to me that there are those spokesmen in the Republican Party who apparently are seeking to impair the accomplishment of the great principles of a strong bipartisan foreign policy, in support of which Vandenberg has led not only the Republican Party in recent years, but the American people generally."

Mailing Vandenberg's return to Washington, after a critical lung operation, Morse said Republicans and the country generally should "heed' what he said.

Sees Party Forewarned

"His (Vandenberg's) recent press statement shows he does not favor any rubber-stamp policy, but rather forewarns his party to keep the issue of foreign policy high above the level of partisan politics, so that we may remain a united people in all our efforts to meet the threat of Russian totalitarianism," Morse continued.

Saying there is greater need than ever before for two-party cooperation in developing specific foreign policy programs, in advance of agreements by the State Department and White House, Morse criticized the Administration's failure to keep GOP leaders fully advised on China policies. He said this, however, did not justify disavowal of the bipartisan foreign policy course.

"Rather," Morse said, "the shortcomings which have developed simply point out the need for perfecting the application of the principle of bipartisan foreign policy, instead of destroying the principle.

Says Reds Would Rejoice

"I am convinced that every Communist in America and in the Kremlin would rejoice if these members of Congress who want to destroy the principle . . . and throw the issue into partisan politics, should have their way.

"Further, I am convinced that a spirit of isolationism does not characterize the thinking of an overwhelming majority of Republican voters in this country . . . In due course of time they will make their views clear at the polls."

Praising Vandenberg's "statesmanship," Morse said the Michigan Republican "has led not only the Republican Party . . . but the American people generally" in developing a sound bipartisan foreign policy.

Morse then tangled with Wherry and other conservative party leaders on the GOP's domestic course.

He sharply challenged proposals to put the antilynching bill ahead of fair employment practices legislation in the coming session.

Morse said the Republican Party "was born out of the womb of civil rights . . . and should welcome an opportunity to start out with FEPC." Said Morse:

"This talk about starting with antilynching legislation reflects the desire of Southern Democrats to soft-pedal the civil rights issue. They (Southern Democrats) will then propose a Constitutional amendment on antilynching legislation, knowing full well they control enough Legislatures to block the amendment.

"I hope Republicans in the Senate will not fall for that sell-out on civil rights . . . The Republican Party cannot afford to enter into any form of horse trade on civil rights and be true to Lincoln principles."

Offers More Suggestions

Noting the quest for a "program," Morse said he had a few more suggested improvements on the "negative, platitudinous policies that characterize the utterances of the conservative wing of the party."

He said the GOP should (1) adopt the Committee for Economic Development tax program; (2) support all of the Hoover Commission reforms; (3) insist on civilian control of the military establishment; (4) back repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and substitution of a fair-to-both-sides labor law; (5) support legislation for Federal aid to the States in the education, health and housing fields; (6) insist on economic union in Europe in return for ECA funds, and (7) support "fair farm legislation based on the principle of flexible parity and elimination of recent abuses."

At Halfway Mark

Europe's Rate Of Recovery Disappoints

Paris, Dec. 28 (AP).—American and European economic officials admitted privately today that western Europe's progress toward economic recovery was definitely below expectations as the four-year Marshall Plan neared the half-way mark.

The Americans stressed particularly that little progress has been made so far toward freeing the 19 Marshall Plan nations from the tangle of trade barriers and currency controls that have hampered trade among them since the end of the war.

With the United States Congress due to start discussions on third-year Marshall Plan appropriations in January, American recovery officials in Europe plan to press these two goals:

1. Agreement on a new 19-nation monetary fund to settle trade balances among the member nations and make it easier for them to trade with each other.

2. Approval of a top-level reorganization of the European Marshall Plan organization to give it more power to lead the 19 nations into closer economic relations.

Most experts agree that adoption of the two American-backed goals would put Europe's economy on a more solid basis, but they warn that an even more basic problem would remain unsolved.

During the first two years of Marshall Plan aid, they said, many European industries showed impressive increases in production by replacing old machines with modern equipment and by feeding their plants a steady stream of American-supplied raw materials.

"That's the easy part of the job," one French industrial expert said. "What we've got to do now is increase efficiency and lower prices. That's going to be much harder."

the drive from the Palace Hotel to the clinic at 3:10 a. m. The baby was born at 9:45 a. m. (3:45 a. m. EST).

Prince Aly was haggard and unshaven, but he grinned with the pride of any new papa as he announced the birth from the hospital steps an hour and a half later. He said both the 31-year-old Rita and the child were doing nicely. The delivery was a normal one, under gas. Questioned by a score of newsmen, he gave details:

"It's a girl, two and a half kilograms.

"Yes, everybody is all right. She has had a very tough time, but everything has gone off all right.

"Rita is very tired. So is her husband."

"Yes, she has just seen the baby. She seemed awfully pleased.

"She (the baby) is a very good looking girl, but I suppose, being the father, I shouldn't say so myself."

The birth was supervised by Dr. Rodolphe Rochat, Swiss obstetrician who delivered Princess Marguerite, daughter of former King Mihai of Romania and Princess Anne of Bourbon-Parma, and other royal offspring.

Fear had been expressed that a caesarian section might be necessary since Rita's first child was born by that method in 1944. She is Rebecca Welles, daughter of the screen star and actor-producer, Orson Welles. The parents were divorced in 1948.

Dr. Rochat announced a week ago that the birth could be expected "from hour to hour." Rita and Aly went for a drive yesterday. Labor started a few hours later.

Arrangements had been made for a police escort to clear the way for the trip to the clinic, but Aly drove her there himself and didn't notify police until later. He said he had sent a cable to his father telling of the birth.

The new princess is to be reared in the Moslem faith, the father said. Rita was reared as a Roman Catholic.

The child should qualify for the title of "International of 1949." She inherits from her parents the blood of four nations. Aly is half Persian (Iranian) and half Italian. Rita is half Spanish and half American. The baby can have the choice of three citizenships, British, Iranian or American.

North Atlantic Council To Confer on Strategy

The twelve nation North Atlantic Council will meet here January 6 to approve an over-all strategy for the defense of the North Atlantic area.

Announcing this yesterday, the State Department said Secretary of State Acheson will represent the United States.

The primary task of the council will be to consider the defense strategy worked out by military leaders and defense ministers in the recent Paris conference.

The plan must be approved before the one-billion-dollar American arms aid program for Western Europe can be set in motion.

U. S. Recognizes Indonesia; Cochran Named Ambassador

Harris & Ewing
H. MERLE COCHRAN
Ambassador to new nation

The United States of America formally recognized the United States of Indonesia yesterday and appointed H. Merle Cochran, one of its crack career diplomats, as its first Ambassador to the new republic.

In a letter which Cochran carried with him to Jakarta (Batavia), the Indonesian capital, President Truman said the agreement that freed Indonesia was "one of the most outstanding successes of the United Nations."

Peaceful settlement of the long quarrel, the President wrote, has given "renewed faith to the peoples of the world who are seeking to develop methods of peacefully settling their disputes."

The President also heaped praises on Cochran for his work as a member of the Good Offices Commission of the United Nations, which brought the Dutch and Indonesians together.

He wrote that Cochran had shown "untiring effort and statesmanship," had given "devoted service over and above the line of duty," and had "contributed to an increase in respect for the United Nations and for the role of this Government in the affairs of that organization."

Cochran's appointment was unusual in that the Indonesians themselves asked for it. He had previously been appointed Ambassador to Pakistan, but never took up his post.

To succeed him in Pakistan, the President named Avra M. Warren of Ilchester, Md., a 56-year-old wheelhorse of the career service. Warren, now Ambassador to Finland, spent most of his career at Latin American posts.

President Truman also appointed Edward A. Dow, jr., a foreign service officer, to replace Cochran on the United Nations commission in Indonesia. John M. Cabot, consul general at Shanghai, was expected to succeed Warren in Finland.

New U. S. Ambassador Calls on Soekarno

Jakarta, Java, Dec. 28 (U.P.)—United States Ambassador-designate to the United States of Indonesia, H. Merle Cochran, today called on President Soekarno; Minister of Defense, the Sultan of Jogjakarta, and Minister of State Mohammed Rum.

Cochran, who won Indonesian respect and liking as the United States member of the United Nations Indonesian Commission, asked Soekarno for an appointment to present his credentials, reliable sources said, and was granted a date "within a few days."

Cochran was delayed by bad weather from attending the independence day celebrations here yesterday and today. Soekarno arrived only today, his first full visit to the capital in four troublesome years. He received a tumultous welcome from an estimated 150,000 Indonesians waiting at the airport.

At the palace another 100,000 persons were present to hear their president's first speech since full independence was granted to this new state yesterday.

"Indonesia is now on peaceful terms with the Dutch and other foreigners," Soekarno said. "They are all guests in our country. Show them hospitality."

The crowd replied with cries of "Merdeka. Merdeka (freedom)."

"We must start now on the reconstruction of our nation," Soekarno said. "Let our slogan be: 'Work, work and work. Once free, forever free.'"

Soekarno, dressed simply in an immaculate white uniform without medals was accompanied from Jogja Karta by his wife and two small children.

Trio of Austrian Teachers Holds Reunion in Art Gallery

There was a reunion in Washington yesterday for three Viennese.

The three, teachers in schools in Austria, visited the Austrian collection of paintings and art objects now on view at the National Gallery. It was the first time they had seen them since the war.

The paintings, sculptures, ivories, tapestries, armor and ornamental objects are on loan from Austria. Most come from the Kunsthistorisches Museum in Vienna. During the war they were stored in salt mines at Alt-Aussee in Upper Austria.

The three, Miss Friedericke Rametsteiner, who teaches an elementary class in Vienna; Dr. Wilhelm Gross, principal of a Vienna high school, and Miss Margaret Fritsch, of the faculty of the teacher's college laboratory school in Salzburg, are touring this country as guests of the National Education Association ,observing methods of teaching.

Yesterday they visited the gallery with a group of 200 District school teachers who took a morning out of their Christmas holiday to learn about the art treasures. They will return with their students before the exhibit closes here January 22.

Among the District teachers was a native of Austria, Mrs. Helen Brower, who left Vienna before the war and now teaches languages at Eastern High School.

The visitors from Vienna were enthusiastic over the display of the great masterpieces collected by the House of Hapsburg from the time of the Middle Ages.

They lingered longest at Bernardo Bellotto's canvas showing the rooftops of Vienna as seen from the Belvedere Garden. In this eighteenth century work they were able to pick out the spires and domes of buildings still standing in Vienna.

Dr. Raymond Stites, director of the education department of the National Gallery, presented an hour-long lecture in which he singled out for the teachers 30 works which he thought most interesting to students.

They included the dolphin-decorated bronze Greek discus of the period 500 B. C., the famed Cellini gold salt celler, the Miseroni emerald unguent jar, the horse armor of Frederick III and Maximilian I and selected works of Titian, Rubens, Rembrandt, Vermeer and Jan Brueghel.

Dr. Stites will repeat his lecture at 10 a. m. today and Friday.

Russia Returns First Of Three Icebreakers

The State Department said today Russia has returned the icebreaker Southwind to the United States Navy at the Japanese naval base at Yokosuka. The ship had been lend-leased to Russia during the war. Navy reports indicate it is in "satisfactory condition."

Two others, the Northwind, and the Eastwind, are still in Russian hands. The Russian embassy said last month they were stuck in the ice in the eastern arctic and that it would be impossible to return them with the Southwind.

Jap War Criminals Freed

Tokyo, Dec. 28 (U.P.)—Gen. Douglas MacArthur, in a Christmas amnesty, today released 43 Japanese war criminals from prison. Among them was Okinori Yonegaki, former Japanese consul general at Canton.

Invasion Feared

Nationalists Bomb Reds Near Hainan

Hongkong, Dec. 28 (AP).—Farflung Nationalist bomber raids today apparently sounded the prelude to the battle for Hainan, island of government refuge off China's south coast.

A government communique asserted hits were scored and large fires started on Liuchow peninsula, which juts to within 10 miles of Hainan.

Targets were massed Communist troops, wharves, warehouses, and swarms of small craft collected for the impending Red assault across the narrow straits.

Other Nationalist planes hammered targets along the South China coast from Canton to Swatow, 220 air miles to the east.

Alerted for the Red smash, the Nationalist command on Hainan banned all civil shipping from entering a 12-mile zone around the island.

Chinese press dispatches from Hainan said the last Nationalist planes to leave the mainland had arrived. They came yesterday from Chengtu. That short-lived Nationalist provisional capital was abandoned by its garrison. Whether Red troops had entered was not known.

It is believed the Nationalists have 200,000 soldiers on Hainan. Some naval units also are available for defense.

China 'Full Of Russians'

casts by the Communist official New China news agency.

Authoritative Communist informants said Soviet advisers are helping plan an invasion of Formosa, the island 100 miles off the east China mainland which has become the Nationalist government's last stronghold.

The invasion can be expected by summer at the latest in the Communists' biggest land, sea and air forces combined operations, the Communist sources said.

Chinese technicians who visited Manchuria said Soviet instructors were helping train airplane pilots and sailors in Manchuria and were helping supervise construction of landing craft.

Americans Asked to Quit

Shanghai Chinese engineers said about 20 Russian shipbuilders arrived in Shanghai last month to work in the Kiangnan dockyards, damaged by demolitions and Nationalist bombings. The dockyard formerly operated under the Economic Cooperation Administration, and several Americans employed in the dockyard were asked to resign when the Russians arrived.

Other informed sources said a Russian-language school for nurses has been established inside Shanghai to train Chinese personnel for service with Soviet military missions. A number of these missions were reported in China, including at least one movie unit making films of strategic areas.

Most of the Soviet advisers are reported in Manchuria which presumably has been made an experimental ground for Soviet communism in China. But Soviet advisers also have been encountered in Shanghai and as far south as Canton.

Bidault Defeated on 4 Items As Budget Battle Continues

Paris, Dec. 28 (NYHT).—France's month-long battle of the budget is to be settled decisively Friday when the National Assembly gives its verdict on two votes of confidence demanded by Premier Georges Bidault.

After an all-night session on the budget that ended just before 1 p. m. today, the outlook did not seem encouraging for the Premier and his ministers. Although a solution or compromise still was possible, government budget policy was defeated on four different Assembly ballots.

None of these involved confidence, but they showed government weakness and the devil-may-care spirit of the government majority's insurgents. By margins of 11 and 13 and 15 votes the government lost two propositions for higher taxes on automobile tires and a third for a new diesel oil levy.

The fourth government upset came when the Assembly tossed out a Finance Ministry plan allowing citizens who had secreted capital abroad to repatriate it by paying a 25 percent fine.

The main issue on which Premier Bidault asked for confidence is the government demand for a 1 percent increase in the production tax (expected to yield 45 billion francs or 49 million dollars).

Cubans, Czechs Sign U. N. Genocide Pact

Lake Success, N. Y., Dec. 28 (U.P.)—Cuba and Czechoslovakia today became the thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth nations to sign the United Nations convention against genocide—defined as mass murder of racial, religious or political groups.

The pact on prevention and punishment of genocide will become effective when 20 nations have ratified it. So far, this has been done only by Australia, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Iceland and Norway.

Alienists to Testify About Chambers

New York, Dec. 28 (NYHT).—Expert testimony concerning the mental condition of Whittaker Chambers, key prosecution witness in the perjury trial of Alger Hiss, will be permitted by Judge Henry W. Goddard, according to persistent reports in the United States courthouse today.

After a lengthy argument in chambers which delayed the opening of today's session, Judge Goddard refused to make any statement about his ruling. Attorneys for both sides, who have been cautioned by the judge not to discuss the case with newspapermen, dodged questions about it.

It was nevertheless reported that the defense plans to call Dr. Carl Binger, a practicing psychiatrist, and Dr. Henry Alexander Murray, lecturer and former professor of psychology and psychoanalysis at Harvard University, as witnesses. Judge Goddard was expected to allow both to give their opinions about Chambers' mind.

At the first trial, which ended in a hung jury last July 8, Dr. Binger appeared as a witness and listened to a 45-minute hypothetical question. In this question Lloyd Paul Stryker, then chief defense counsel, summed up all the questionable incidents in the life of Chambers which had come out in the testimony, and asked Dr. Binger if he could form an opinion of Chambers' mental condition on the basis of this evidence.

Judge Kaufman's Ruling

Judge Samuel H. Kaufman then ruled that Dr. Binger could not answer the question because the record was clear enough for the jurors to form their own opinions.

During the present trial Dr. Binger has appeared in the spectators' section of the courtroom briefly on two occasions. When Defense Counsel Claude B. Cross questioned Chambers he laid considerably less emphasis on his personal peculiarities than Stryker had done. It was not known tonight whether Dr. Murray had witnessed any part of either trial.

Hiss, who was indicted for perjury when he swore he had not given Government secrets to Chambers for the use of a Communist spy ring in 1938, testified under cross-examination most of today. It was his fifth day on the stand, and his third of cross-examination.

In painstaking detail Assistant United States Attorney Thomas F. Murphy drew from him an account of what he believes he did with each of four memoranda in his handwriting produced by Chambers.

No Independent Recollection

Hiss said he had no independent recollection of any of the memoranda, but he reconstructed his actions in minute detail on the basis of his general practice in such cases. He said he made the memoranda for his own reference in reporting to his superior, then Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Sayre.

Murphy also read from the minutes of the grand jury which indicted Hiss. The minutes showed that Hiss admitted knowing Lee Pressman, John Abt, and the late Harold Ware while he was in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in 1934, but he did not know they were Communists. He said he had since heard them called Communists, but he still did not know if they were. He identified Henry Collins—who has been accused by Chambers of being a Communist—as a boyhood friend, and said he had no knowldege that Collins was a Communist.

The cross-examination of Hiss will continue Thursday. After he leaves the stand his wife may testify before the psychiatrists are called.

The testimony of Hiss was interrupted today to permit other witnesses to take the stand. Judge Charles E. Wyzanski of the United States District Court in Boston gave him a good character reference and corroborated one of the minor details of his story; Ashley J. Nicholas, assistant chief of the passport division of the State Department, told some of the background of the document referred to in one of the handwritten memoranda.

U. S. Ordered to Call FBI Employe to Stand

New York, Dec. 28 (AP).—Federal Judge Sylvester J. Ryan ordered the Government today to produce as a witness the FBI employe who destroyed disc recordings of telephone conversations by Judith Coplon and Valentin A. Gubitchev.

"I think he should be produced as a witness to determine when, where and under what circumstances they were destroyed," the judge said.

His ruling came in a pretrial hearing by which Miss Coplon and the Russian engineer Gubitchev are seeking dismissal of an indictment charging them with conspiracy to spy for the Soviet Union.

She Wants Babies And a Safe World

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

MRS. PATRICIA CAPELLA, 26-year-old Detroit-born dancer, yesterday in New York cabled five world leaders asking them to get together and make the world safe so she can have babies. She said she and other married women would like to have babies but are afraid "our children will be used as cannon fodder" in a forthcoming war. She is the wife of Jacques Capella, a French classical dancer. Her cables went to President Truman, Pope Pius XII, Premier Stalin, King George and French President Auriol

TVA Reports Valley Gain in Productivity

By The Associated Press

Tennessee Valley Authority's directors told Congress yesterday that private enterprise has "prospered and advanced" in the seven-State region in which the agency operates.

The board, headed by Gordon R. Clapp, said in its sixteenth annual report:

"The valley is becoming more and more productive both agriculturally and industrially. Its resources, brought more intensively under control and being more efficiently conserved and used, have strengthened both the region and the country as a whole."

The report said farm electric service, mechanization, fertilization and improved farm practices have boosted farm production, "with 93,000 fewer farm workers in 1947 than in 1933." In this and several other instances, the latest statistics quoted were for 1947.

The TVA directors also said the valley's manufacturing plants employed 158,000 more workers in 1947 than in 1933, showing an increase of 147 percent, as compared with a 119 percent increase in the Nation as a whole.

"Average income per capita in the Tennessee Valley proper increased from $148 in 1933 to $797 in 1947," the report said, "while that in the United States went up from $368 to $1323."

The report said the benefits of the TVA are not confined to the region. It cited the agency's purchase of 325 million dollars of electrical equipment from outside the valley as an example.

The TVA said it is delivering electric power to more than one million consumers from its generating system, which has an installed capacity of 2,747,092 kilowatts.

Power revenues for last year jumped more than 9 million dollars to 58 million dollars.

"Net revenues from operations were about $21,500,000 and represented a return of 5 percent on the average net investment in power facilities, which includes working capital and an allocation to power of a portion of the investment in multiple-purpose facilities," the report said.

"This rate of return was exceeded only by the 5½ percent earned in 1947. The annual return for the past five years has averaged 4.7 percent and from the beginning of TVA's operations it has averaged nearly 4 percent."

Last year's average annual bill for TVA consumers was $42.50, as compared with $36.51 for the previous year and $48.43 for the country as a whole. The area average rate was 1.54 cents a kilowatt-hour, while the national average rate was 2.98 cents.

Since 1933 power rates in the valley have come down more than 73 percent, the report said, while only a 46 percent drop was noted nationally.

Farouk Said to Have Set Date To Wed Fiancee of U. N. Aide

New York, Dec. 28 (AP).—Egyptian King Farouk I is reported, despite opposition within the royal family, to have fixed his thirtieth birthday, February 11, as the date for marrying the 16-year-old fiancee of one of his subjects, the New York Post said today.

The fantastic royal romance "recalls the Arabian Nights and threatens to rock the entire Moslem world," said a dispatch filed from Rome by William Attwood, a New York Post correspondent who left Cairo yesterday.

The girl is brown-haired Narriman Sadek, daughter of an Egyptian civil servant and the betrothed of Zaki Hachian, 27, slender, Harvard-educated economic expert who is on leave without pay from the Middle East section of the U. N. Department of Economic Affairs. She speaks French Arabic, plays the piano and is competent on the tennis court. She and Hachian have been friends since childhood.

The Post's dispatch supplemented news of the romance received by the Associated Press Tuesday from a responsible source. No announcement has come from Cairo. Egyptian news is heavily censored.

Embassy Protests "Inaccuracies"

The Egyptian Embassy in Washington denied today that King Farouk had split up Hachian and Miss Sadek, but said nothing about whether the King and the girl will marry.

Ambassador Kamil Bey Abdul Rahim issued a statement protesting "inaccuracies as well as what I consider a false impression" in the Associated Press story. He referred to a statement that the King fell in love with the girl when Hachian took her to the palace in November to ask the "King's blessing" for their marriage and that police later seized all photographs of Miss Sadek in Hachian's apartment.

The source of the AP account revised a part of that today, saying the correct information was "the king first saw the girl in the shop of Ahmed Magib Pasha, a leading Cairo jeweler, on December 4, while she was selecting a ring with her fiance, Hachian."

The adjusted version corresponds with The Post's account from Attwood. The king was reported to have been summoned to the shop by the jeweler, a middle-aged crony, for a look at the girl after the couple dropped in to get a ring.

Attwood wrote that the king abruptly decided to marry her, though the marriage of Hachian and Miss Sadek was set for December 8 and hailed by the Cairo press as "the wedding of the year."

Both in love with Narriman?

Girl Reported Stunned

The girl was reported stunned, but blurted out that she loved Hachian and later said the same thing to the king's sister, Princess Fawzia, who urged him to call the whole thing off. The princess was quoted as saying two days ago:

"He can't mean it—it must be a joke'."

The Attwood account went on:

But Hachian had been forbidden December 21 to see the girl, ordered to leave the country in two weeks and return to his post at Lake Success. It was also suggested he marry someone else first.

"I'll go because I feel I'm going crazy here," Zaki told me yesterday, "but I will marry no one else. I still love Narriman and I know she still loves me."

It is still possible that what began as a whim may end as a whim, especially as Farouk is confronted by hostile world reaction. The king, who is absolute ruler of Egypt despite the fiction of a constitution, could suddenly change his mind and deny the whole thing in the censored press.

Pope Pleads With Envoys Of 37 Nations to End Cold War

Vatican City, Dec. 28 (U.P.).—Pope Pius today urged diplomats of 37 countries—including Communist-ruled Czechoslovakia—to get their governments to call off the cold war.

Addressing diplomats accredited to the Holy See at a New Year audience, the Pope said:

"You can foresee better than others what joy it would be for us to see this year, the Holy Year, mark the point of departure for a new orientation of spirits and hearts, of a return of the bewildered to an exact conception of the true foundations of a peace assured in the social domain and in international relations."

Increasing solidarity among the peoples of goodwill, the Pope said, "will disperse, we hope, all the vestiges of a still-recent past."

"Bring all your efforts, messieurs, to maintain and strengthen such a beneficial evolution in all classes of the states which you represent with such dignity.

"On our part, with our best wishes, we call upon your excellencies, upon your works, upon your chiefs of state, upon your governments and your people, the benediction of the Lord, source and hope of the happiest prosperity."

Ilya Rath, Charge d'Affaires for Czechoslovakia at the Vatican, was the only representative of an Iron Curtain country present. Envoys of Poland and Lithuania were present, but they represent exile governments and are not recognized by the Red regimes of their respective countries.

Myron C. Taylor, President Truman's personal representative at the Vatican, attended the audience.

Press Poll Rates Roosevelt Greatest in First Half Century

New York, Dec. 28 (U.P.).—Franklin D. Roosevelt made a greater impact on more persons than any other man in the first half of the twentieth century, a United Press poll showed today.

American newspaper and radio editors were asked to select the 10 persons who they believed exerted the greatest influence—for good or for evil—on the lives of the most persons in the past 50 years.

Adolf Hitler ran a close second to Mr. Roosevelt. Then came Thomas Edison, Winston Churchill, Henry Ford, Nicolai Lenin, the Wright brothers, Albert Einstein, Joseph Stalin and Louis Pasteur. Women received many votes. But not one got enough to rank with the top 10.

Mr. Roosevelt won first place over Hitler by only six points. Both received more than twice as many votes as Stalin.

The votes were tabulated by counting 10 points for first place, 9 for second and so on down to one point for tenth place.

Here are the top 10 and the points they received:

Roosevelt, 882; Hitler, 876; Edison, 686; Churchill, 617; Ford, 572; Lenin, 530; the Wright Brothers, 525; Einstein, 511; Stalin, 417, and Pasteur, 396.

Pasteur was the only one who did not live in this century. Although he died in 1895, the editors felt his work toward conquering disease justified his inclusion.

was prepared to see the island fall to the Chinese Communists.

On that same December 1, however, under Secretary of the Army Tracy S. Voorhees and Lieut. Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, Army deputy chief of staff for operations, left Washington by air to see General MacArthur in Tokyo.

Apparently, the general did some convincing. Last Thursday, there was an all-day meeting of the joint chiefs. They began then to work out the new policy, which has now been placed before Secretary Acheson.

On the over-all problem of a positive policy for Asia, it is understood that President Truman asked the national security council to "hurry up" on it. One report was that Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson asked for more time but that the President rejected the plea and said he would be present at the next meeting of the council today at 2:30 p. m.

The council is composed of the President and the Secretaries of State, Defense, Air, Army and Navy.

Grilling Told By Jacobson

pelled by the Hungarians last night, but was taken into custody by the Russians when he crossed the border into Soviet-occupied Austria.

The Russians released him at 3:30 p. m. today at Schwechat, a suburb of Vienna.

He told reporters that while in custody he was questioned largely about the Joint Distribution Committee, a Jewish welfare agency, and about the flight of thousands of Jews from Hungary.

Jacobson said he finally was released only after he signed several statements, including one attesting that he had been given good food and a heated room.

"I don't think I signed any 'confession'," he said.

Jacobson said he believed the Hungarians released him because they found out "there are other people named Jacobson."

Ching Urges Policy On Pension Trend

Ace Aide to Ching

Conciliation Post Resigned By Margolis

The Federal Government is losing another key executive who can no longer afford to work for Uncle Sam.

William N. Margolis, assistant director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, yesterday submitted his resignation effective March 1. Margolis, an ace conciliator for the past eight years, will give up his $10,500-a-year post to enter private practice as a labor relations consultant.

Margolis was an assistant regional director working out of New York City when he was chosen to be assistant to Cyrus S. Ching, the industrialist who took over the directorship of the service in September, 1947.

At the time, Ching did not personally know Margolis, but chose him as lieutenant on the basis of Margolis' record in helping settle the five-month Yale & Towne strike at Stamford, Conn., and the long-lines phone strike of 1947.

Since coming to Washington, Margolis has participated in mediating every major dispute, including those involving the longshore and maritime workers on both coasts, coal and steel.

In accepting Margolis' resignation, Director Ching said: "Anyone who has made your very important contribution to industrial peace in this country should have a deep feeling of satisfaction."

Margolis, who is 42, attended Rutgers University and Fordham Law School. He practiced law in his home State of New Jersey, and for four years before joining the Federal service, worked for the New Jersey Unemployment Compensation Commission.

He plans to operate offices in Newark, New York City and here. Margolis recently moved his wife and two children from Bethesda to New Brunswick, N. J.

Cyrus S. Ching, chief Federal conciliator, yesterday called for a national policy on the relationship of Federal social security benefits to management-labor pension programs.

The director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service warned that during the past two years the Nation has been "drifting" toward a system under which existing Federal benefits are supplemented by pensions paid out of private industry programs, established through collective bargaining or strike action.

"This may be wise," commented Ching, "or, on the other hand, it may be improvident.

Would 'Take Bearings'

"Before the drift goes too far, however, it would be well to take our bearings and devise a national policy which will help us set our future course with deliberation."

If such action is not taken at once, Ching declared, the Nation may have to pay a high price in additional strikes called to compel the payment of private industrial pensions.

Except for the pension issue, Ching yesterday foresaw increasingly improved management-labor relations in store for the Nation in the future. He said that the people often got a wrong impression about the true state of industrial peace because of the headline publicity given to disputes and strikes in contrast to the "no news" value of the "tens of thousands" of agreements negotiated through collective bargaining.

Ching observed that the month-long steel strike of last fall, costly as it was, nonetheless demonstrated how far forward the Nation has progressed in its management-labor relations. He pointed out that the steel strikes of 1892 and of the 1930's were accompanied by violence, whereas the steel strike of 1949 was confined to economic weapons, without either side resorting to force.

"As a result," Ching said, "the relations developed in recent years between employer and the (steel) union were unimpaired. There is every reason to believe that such relations will continue, in the future, to be further . . . improved by both sides."

Praises Fact-Finders

The conciliation director commented favorably on the use of fact-finding boards, with authority to make recommendations, in industrial disputes of an extraordinary nature. Such a board was set up in the steel dispute. Its recommendations failed to avert the strike, but they narrowed the issues and permitted earlier settlement of the dispute, according to Ching.

Such fact-finding boards, used discriminately, Ching said, "seem to be well designed to encourage settlement and . . . although they may be regarded as going beyond normal mediation techniques, fall far short of the compulsion associated with injunction decrees and seizure orders."

Ching concluded his "philosophizing" press conference yesterday with the following comment:

"We live in a democracy. Our democratic ideals and practices apply to our industrial as well as to our political institutions. Under a free democratic system, we shall continue to have strikes, lockouts, and labor-management disturbances. They are the price we pay for our freedoms.

"Those freedoms can be retained and their price lowered only by unremitting efforts by all—particularly, management and union leaders and Government representatives — to improve human relations in industry and to promote those practices which result in the most effective collective bargaining.

"I am convinced that great strides are being made toward this objective."

Truman Back, Set for Period Of Heavy Work

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

President Truman flew back to Washington after a Christmas holiday at his Missouri home yesterday, ready for an intensive period of work.

Some day next week he will appear before Congress to deliver his message on the state of the Union. He will also forward two other messages, one on the economic situation in the country and the other on the Federal budget.

The blue and white presidential plane, the Independence, landed at the National Airport at 4 p. m. Mr. Truman looked fit and rested as he came down the gangway, wearing a blue topcoat over a gray suit and carrying his old American Legion cane. He said he had "a very nice trip."

Mrs. Truman remained at the family home in Independence, Mo. The First Lady plans to come to Washington by train in about a week with her mother, 87-year-old Mrs. David Wallace.

Miss Margaret Truman also stayed in Independence. She has a singing engagement in Syracuse, N. Y., a week from Monday, and plans to leave home on New Year's Eve.

Eben Ayers, assistant White House press secretary, told reporters at the White House that Mr. Truman would not have a press-radio conference this week.

About the time that the Independence was landing here, Cabinet officers and representatives of Cabinet officers were gathering at the White House to discuss the President's forthcoming economic report to Congress.

Leon H. Keyserling, acting chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, and John D. Clark, a member of the council, outlined the report they had submitted, and which will be the basis of the report Mr. Truman sends to Capitol Hill.

The White House meeting, which lasted for 1½ hours, was called by Dr. John R. Steelman, the assistant to the President. Among those who attended were Attorney General McGrath, Secretary of Agriculture Brannan, Secretary of the Interior Chapman, and experts from the State Department, the Treasury, Department of Commerce, Department of Labor, Bureau of the Budget, and the Federal Reserve Board.

insisting on illegal union security provisions in its contracts. The restraining order might even go so far as to direct Lewis and the union to cease instigating or supporting an illegal strike—should the court decide that the union-imposed three-day workwee': is actually a limited strike.

In announcing the NLRB suit, Joseph E. Moody, president of the Southern Coal Producers Association, disclosed his group had notified the other major operators' associations of its intentions.

Negotiations at Standstill

Contract negatiations between union and management in the bituminous mines—covering some 400,000 miners—have been at a standstill for the past two months. Talks between the Southern producers and the union, ignored for the most part by John L. himself, collapsed on November 2 at Bluefield, W. Va. The association charged the union wasn't bargaining in good faith; the union countered that it was the operators who walked out of the conference room.

The United Mine Workers have signed up an undisclosed number of independent soft coal mines, representing a tiny percentage of the national production, to a new c.ntract. It provides a pay raise of 95 cents a day and a 15-cent-a-ton in the welfare fund royalties. In return these mines are permitted to operate five or six days a week, while the unsigned mines are limited, by Lewis, to a three-day week.

Moody said that his group had filed the charges against the UMW "reluctantly" and only "after six months of vain effort" to negotiate a new contract. In an outburst of Lewis-like prose, he said:

"Childish Name Calling"

"Our attempts to get the industry and our employes back to work on a mutually profitable basis have constantly been met by ruthless, monopolistic tactics, childish name calling, and Shakespearian caprice."

Moody accused the UMW leader of bringing many companies close to bankruptcy; of causing the miners to be placed on a starvation diet; of creating a coal shortage for consumers; and of injuring the national economic order by the three-day week.

Among other things, the association's brief charged that the United Mine Workers had also violated the laws of Virginia and Tennessee by requiring that coal operators maintain certain conditions of employment.

The charges also stated that the union, by insisting upon payment by the operators into the "so-called welfare fund" and "by threatening and carrying out economic reprisals for discontinuation of such payments" was violating the Taft-Hartley Act.

Youth Sentenced For Larceny in Alexandria Court

Charles B. Dixon, 19, of 804 Montgomery st., Alexandria, yesterday pleaded guilty and was sentenced to six months each on three charges of petty larceny by Judge James R. Duncan, of Alexandria Civil and Police Court.

In addition, Dixon was ordered held for grand jury action on a breaking and entering charge and two counts of grand larceny.

Dixon was arrested for investigation early Tuesday by Pvt. Alvin Dodd, who overheard him asking a waiter if he needed any change. Questioning brought from him the confession, police said, that he had broken into the Alexandria Recreation Center and looted several pinball machines.

Trade Outlook Good, Sawyer Reports

Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer said yesterday a six-month economic survey of the Nation showed that business prospects for the immediate future are good, but that "certain factors would indicate the wisdom of a tempered optimism."

Sawyer submitted to Presidential Assistant John R. Steelman a report on his talks with 3000 businessmen and 1000 labor union officials during a 15,000-mile tour. He said the survey was the most exhaustive ever made by the Commerce Department.

Sawyer said he was convinced that wartime excise taxes are hurting retail sales and in the case of jewelry, furs, luggage and admissions "the effects are, in specific cases, very serious." Sources close to Sawyer said he probably would recommend a reduction in the levies."

Sawyer, who has been working with Steelman on means of combatting regional unemployment, said his survey showed the employment situation was better in October than in May and indicated "a still further improvement."

He said conditions varied from "substantial unemployment" in New England to "unusual strength and vigorous growth" in employment in the Southeast.

As for the over-all economic situation, he said:

"Prospects for our immediate future are good. It is probable that business will continue at its present level throughout at least the early part of 1950. Certain factors, however, would indicate the wisdom of a tempered optimism.

"Many small businessmen, although still operating at fairly high levels, are suffering a substantially reduced profit margin. These reduced earnings make continued expansion of plant and equipment somewhat less attractive."

Sawyer said the persons with whom he talked gave him "impressive evidence that the business declines experienced during the first half of the year were natural and necessary readjustments from the high inflationary levels of 1948."

The readjustment was almost completed by fall, he said, but "unfortunately" was interrupted by the coal and steel strikes.

He said business can move ahead profitably if businessmen feel their prospects are reasonably good and "that hard work and ingenuity will permit them to keep a reasonable part of this return."

Sawyer divided his report into sections dealing with national and regional conditions. In the national report, he summed up recommendations made to him in the following categories:

Taxation: Reducation or elimination of excise taxes; elimination of "double taxation" on both corporate earnings and on dividends, and liberalization of corporate income taxes to permit small businesses to retain a large share of earnings as working capital.

Small business credit: Make it easier for small business to obtain loans.

Labor-management relations: Many businessmen reported concern over demands for wage increases at a time "when profit margins are being cut and they are trying to reduce or hold down costs.'

Government procurement: Some leeway should be given in the matter of negotiated contracts, and large contracts should be broken up so smaller firms could bid on them.

Foreign trade: Complaints were made that operations of the Economic Cooperation Administration were destroying traditional trade relations between American firms and foreign customers.

SEC Report

3d Quarter Savings Rose $1.7 Billions

Although Americans continued to add to their savings during the third quarter of 1949, they failed to increase their holdings of corporate securities.

The Securities and Exchange Commission, which makes the quarterly savings study, reported yesterday that the total increase of individuals' liquid savings during the July-September period was $1.7 billion.

Exactly this amount showed up as an increase in currency and bank deposits. Changes in other forms of liquid savings cancelled out.

Thus, individuals' equity in insurance and pension reserves rose by $1.5 billion, and in savings and loan associations by $200 million. But these were almost exactly offset by individuals' holdings in corporate securities decreasing by $100 million; by increases in their mortgage debt of one billion dollars and consumers' debt (installment debt, charge accounts, etc.) of $600 million.

Savings In Cash, Deposits

The most interesting aspect of the picture painted by the SEC report is the fact that individuals seemed to keep their savings in the form of cash or demand bank deposits, rather than investing in securities.

Actually, they increased their holdings of stocks by $200 million, but reduced their holdings of corporate bonds by almost $300. In previous quarters, ever since 1946, in fact, Americans had increased their net holdings of corporate securities.

This suggests that investment bankers and other marketers of corporate issues have recently been failing to take advantage of the post-war increases in citizens' savings.

Individuals continued to put their earnings into durable goods, such as household appliances and homes, at a steady rate, and to augment their bank deposits—but they failed to buy, as previously—business securities.

Insurance Company Buying

Another trend was indicated by the report's showing that institutions, such as insurance companies, absorbed almost all the new bond issues during the third quarter, and furthermore, bought bonds from individuals in the market.

In the same way, the institutions increased their holdings of United States Government securities, while individuals' holdings of them declined.

Although individuals increased their holdings of United States bonds by 300 million dollars, they reduced their holdings of other United States Government securities by about 500 million dollars.

Total increase in liquid savings during the quarter, $1.7 billion, was as much as the total increase in the two previous three-month periods. But it was considerably below the $2.8 billion increase in the comparable quarter last year.

Holidays Over But U. S. Holds Many Turkeys

The holidays are over, but Uncle Sam still has a lot of turkeys he'd like to sell.

All told, the Government has $319,474 invested in turkeys bought during the autumn to support the price of America's favorite year-end meat.

A month ago the Commodity Credit Corporation offered 720,000 pounds of the highest type turkeys for sale, thinking there should be a market just before the turkey, or holiday, season.

The birds cost the Government an average of 42 cents a pound. The market price was slightly above that. But no offer of 48 cents a pound—the parity price at which the law says all such stocks must be sold—was received. So CCC heads into the new year with its stock of turkeys undiminished. In fact, it expects to increase its holdings soon.

The largest purchases were made in Ohio. However, CCC has about 150,000 pounds of the Virginia Shenandoah Valley's best products.

Government officials point out that CCC has only a small proportion of the turkey meat on hand. This year 676 million pounds were raised, of which a total of 105 million are still in storage, even after the big Thanksgiving and Christmas rush.

Food Prices Here Rise 1.2% In Month Ended November 15

Food costs advanced 1.2 percent in Washington between October 15 and November 15 but the overall cost of living showed little change, the Bureau of Labor Statistics Consumer Price Index revealed yesterday.

Nationally, the cost of goods and services to city dwellers rose one tenth of 1 percent during the month.

Rents in Washington were up 1.5 percent in the three-month period between August 15 and November 15. Nationally, rents lost four tenths of 1 percent between October 15 and November 15.

Food prices nationally were up one tenth of 1 percent in the month due to a 29 percent lift in coffee prices and advances in fruits and vegetables, offsetting lower pork, ham, bacon and lard prices.

Fuel prices advanced a fraction nationally due to higher coal and coke costs, BLS stated.

The national figures showed that, despite the overall price stability, there are fluctuations of importance in certain lines.

Clothing prices, for example, are now at their lowest level in more than two years and 7½ percent under the peak of October 1948.

Soap and shortening prices took another dip yesterday.

Procter and Gamble cut wholesale soap prices 4 percent and shortening 5 percent while Lever Brothers Co. cut soap prices 4 to 7½ percent and shortening by 1¼ cents a pound.

P & G said soap prices now are 13 percent below the post-war high, with shortening down 47 percent. Lever said yesterday's cut was the eighth in a row and its shortening also is down 47 percent from the peak.

Expert Well Versed in Habits of Spooks Explains Here How Ghost Stories Repeat

Love that ghost!

America's greatest ghost-lover was in town yesterday. He's here today, too, if you have any old haunts.

He's Louis C. Jones, author of "Spooks of the Valley," director of the New York State Historical Association, and of the Farmer's Museum, Cooperstown, N. Y., the Nation's leading folklore museum.

Jones is here for the annual meeting of the American Folklore Society at the Library of Congress. He's just wild about ghosts.

For one thing, he lives in a 26-room "haunted" house in Cooperstown built by the father of James Fenimore Cooper. Jones, his wife and three children, aged 7 to 15, never have seen a ghost, but Jones, at least, would be more than happy if he did.

Jones probably knows more ghost stories than any living American—1200 about New York State alone. Rotating his big cigar above his red shirt and pale gray tie he told us some.

These stories run in patterns, he's found, crop up every few years in different parts of the country. Poltergeists and their clan really are on the loose these postwar days.

Typical recurrent ghost story, said Jones, is that of the hitchhiking ghost.

The basic story here is that a man's driving along on a rainy night when a girl dressed in white thumbs a ride.

The man reaches the house, but the girl's gone. He rings the bell, a woman answers. Frequently the man gets what the folklorists call "double identification"—like a picture of the girl on the piano over the woman's shoulder. She says:

"Yes, that's my daughter. Died two years ago. She's been trying to get home ever since."

Then there's the one about about Lincoln's funeral train. Someone reports he has seen, usually in a heavy mist, a train of this description:

An engine without an engineer pulls a flat car carrying a coffin. Behind is a second engine and a flat car with an orchestra of skeletons. The whole business is hung with crepe.

This tale pops up frequently in the Hudson Valley and the train is identified as Lincoln's funeral train, though it did not travel that way. The story also is common in Ohio.

Folklore Society Ends Sessions Here Today

A symposium on "Ethnic American Folklore" will mark the final day's session of the American Folklore Society starting at 9:30 a. m. today at the Library of Congress.

Thelma G. James, of Wayne University, Detroit, president of the society, addressed the dinner meeting of the organization's sixty-first annual conclave last night at the Willard Hotel. Folksongs and ballads were sung by members of the American Student Goodwill Tour.

The morning session today runs until noon. The afternoon session on "Points of View" will be from 2 to 4 p. m.

D. C. Ex-Rider Defends Cowboy Tradition

"the cowboy myth" of fiction and the movies, the man who spends all his time "combating cattle thieves and rescuing maidens in distress," who beats his chest and proclaims in the words of fiction's Harry Hustler:

"Fact is, if I war rollin' in yaller wealth, I never cud give up the range. Just one whiff of ther trail, one beller from the herd, one rattle of long horn sets my blood to bilin' and seethin' like I was set fair into a red hot furnace . . ."

Boatright was pointing out how "in the slick fiction of the Saturday Evening Post school he (the cowboy) stands for rugged individualism as opposed to social control"; how "his exploits recreate the tired businessman and at the same time strengthen him in his steadfastness."

But somehow the old cowboy from Kansas got the idea that the cowboy was being a bit shoved around at this here meeting.

When Boatright had finished, Professor Laird waited politely until the floor questions were over, then asked if he might say a word.

In the front row he rose, and his voice, polite but firm, rose with him:

"I just want to say that the cowboys did a magnificent job in pioneering and laying the foundation all over the West . . ."

He paused a moment, then went on, his audience intent:

"I, in a small way back there in the eighty's, was a cowboy myself. My father went out from Maine—a "Maniac"—and bought several hundred acres for $3. My father raised cattle. It was my pleasure as a kid to drive them over the country." He looked his audience in the eye and added: "The business of our folklore of the cowboy—it has solid historical foundations..."

The old cowboy sank slowly into his seat.

The folklore society?

hospitals was causing much of the trouble.

The District already has contracts with nine private hospitals for the care of the District's indigent. Contract per day rate is nine dollars, and a broadened definition of medical indigency was set by District heads early this year.

The new definition calls an indigent one who is unable to pay hospital expenses after providing his own necessities and those of his dependents.

HSA, a Community Chest agency, has been caring for the semi-indigent (those with some funds remaining after necessities have been paid for). HSA announced a new contract rate last fall for 1950 by which HSA would pay on a cost basis up to $14.80 per day for patients it certifies. The 1949 rate is $11 per patient day.

Dr. Seckinger said after yesterday's conference that under the new plan "no patient should be denied immediate medical care. There should be no delay in making arrangements for transfers by using present community resources: namely, the hospitals under the Health Department and the private hospitals through the instrumentality of the Hospital Service Agency."

A nonresident indigent problem was brought into sharp focus last Sunday when an Emergency Hospital patient was at first refused admittance to Gallinger Hospital.

The patient, an unemployed carpenter, Stephen Gardner, 38, of 940 K st. nw., was formally admitted, even though he did not meet the residence requirement, when Emergency Hospital attendants declined to take him back, Dr. Seckinger said. "He was deposited on the doorstep and that's what caused the disturbance," the District Health Officer said.

Attending the conference yesterday in addition to Dr. Seckinger were James G. Capossela, Emergency Hospital administrator, Dr. Stebbing, Dr. Lawrence Thomas and John P. Sanderson of the hospital permit bureau; Henry Gavens, director of the Health Department's administration bureau; Willard C. Smith, HSA administrator and Arthur H. Kruse, director of United Community Services.

6-Hour Transatlantic Jet Flights Predicted

New York, Dec. 28 (NYHT).—Six-hour flights across the Atlantic Ocean and four-hour flights between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States are likely to be a "schedule actuality" during the next decade as the result of the development of jet transports, Ralph S. Damon, president of the Trans World Airline, predicted tonight.

Scientists Could Take You to the Moon In 2d Half of Century—If You Had to Go

By John Daffron

Charlottesville, Va., Dec. 28 (AP). How long before we send a rocket to the moon?

Some carefully considered answers to this were given tonight by Dr. R. E. Gibson, director of the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory at Silver Spring, Md. He spoke to a meeting of the fluid dynamics section of the American Physical Society.

It won't be next year or the next five years, Dr. Gibson reported; but, if we find reasons important enough to make the trip necessary, we can certainly do it during the latter half of the twentieth century.

"I wouldn't invest any money in a rocket company selling transportation to the moon, though, for the near future, at least," said the scientist. "The principles involved are known, but the engineering to carry out these principles is a long, long way off."

For example, he said, suppose your rocket plane to the moon carried a payload of 50,000 pounds. To get off the earth, it would require a series of rocket motors which would bring the over-all weight of machine, rockets and payload up to 10,000 tons.

The volume of oxygen alone in it for fuel would be a quarter million cubic feet. And this wouldn't include the hydrogen necessary to mix with the oxygen for fuel.

Even then, the expert explained somewhat wryly, you wouldn't have enough fuel to make a landing and get off the moon again. You'd have to circle and return to earth, conserving what fuel you had left to brake your descent to a safe landing speed.

The cost of a rocket to the moon project will be somewhat terrific and consequently, the physicist said, the reasons for it will have to be pretty good

"Even Columbus had trouble getting backing for his voyage," he noted. "Queen Isabella wasn't just paying for the trip for Columbus to get here. She thought he'd find a quick way to bring spices from the East."

Dr. Gibson was the featured speaker at the conclusion of the first day of the three-day meeting. His laboratory, where the impulse fuse for antiaircraft projectiles was developed during the war, is currently engaged in rocket and guided missile research for the Navy.

Tiny Fungi Found in Cancers But Cause Is Still a Mystery

vestigated by Dr. Diller included patients with Hodgkins disease, breast cancer, lymphosarcoma of various sites, and granulomas.

Other scientific highlights here today at sessions of the organizations comprising the AAAS included a report by a California botanist on shortening the growing periods of common garden vegetables, the use of plastic drift bottles in measuring currents, and the presentation of major annual awards.

Dr. Herbert Jonas, University of California botanist, reported on his work of speeding up the germination of carrot, beet, onion and tomato seeds with the radio waves. Though the seeds were treated in a laboratory oscillator, he said, the process is readily adaptable for large-scale operations.

Prevailing practices for speeding seed growth before planting include the use of solvents, scarifying agents, abrasives, light and heat, and hormones. All work from the outside to the inside of the seed, while the new process exposes the whole seed to a uniform invigoration, Dr. Jonas reported.

Chief importance of speeding seed germination is to benefit those agricultural regions with limited periods and early frosts.

F. C. W. Olson, research associate in the Franz Theodore Stone Laboratory, Ohio State University, told of the added advantage of plastic drift bottles in charting water currents. Chief of these, he said, was that the plastic tubings float horizontally, less exposed to wind movements than the glass drift bottles.

The George Westinghouse awards for science writing were presented at a luncheon at Hotel Statler here today for more than 200 newsmen covering the AAAS scientific sessions. Lester Grant, medical science writer for the New York Herald Tribune, received the $1000 annual prize in newspaper science writing for a series of 15 articles on "The Challenge of Cancer."

A similar cash award, for excellence of science writing in the magazine field, was presented to George W. Gray, also of New York, for "The Great Unravelled Knot" (the brain), published in the October, 1948, issue of Scientific American.

Dr. Seymour S. Kety, Philadelphia physiologist, was presented the $1000 Theobald Smith Award in medical sciences, established in 1936 by Eli Lilly & Co., pharmaceutical firm. He was cited specifically for his work on the quantitative measurement of blood flow and oxygen consumption of the human brain.

The AAAS sessions, at which more than 8000 scientists have already registered since the opening Monday, will end on Saturday.

hearing, it was reasoned, would be more difficult subjects than those who have never heard sound or speech.

A number of experiments were made with a blind deaf mute and his brother. The two had learned to communicate by speech, which was recognized by the deaf mute when he placed his hand on his brother's larynx.

"The deaf mute himself could enunciate a few words, but the enunciation was very breathy and very bad," Dr. Wiener said. "With the apparatus, however, he was for the first time in his life able to compare his brother's speech with his own.

"Within a matter of minutes, and certainly of hours, the improvement in his enunciation was not merely noticeable, but overwhelming. It was perfectly clear to us that our apparatus is an adequate way for a deaf mute, even for a blind deaf mute, to monitor his own speech."

Dr. Weiner emphasized that the device is still "full of bugs," and that it may take a long time before it is ready for general use. Its best performance, so far, he said, involved a run of a series of 80 selections among 12 syllables, with only six errors.

The hand was selected as the best practical site for "simulated hearing" because it showed up as the second most sensitive part of the body for such use, he said. The most sensitive site, he explained, is about the lip and tongue "which must be left without impediment to participate in conversation."

D. C. Commuter For 33 Years Will Retire

Jesse Barkley, a 65-year-old employe of the Public Buildings Service, will have 33 years of commuting between his Baltimore home and his Washington job to remember when he retires Friday.

But of all the trips he's made—friends compute the total at nearly a million miles—the ones that stand out are the trips on the old Washington, Baltimore & Annapolis Railroad.

"There were times, in heavy snow, when it might take as much as four hours to go to Baltimore on that railroad," he said yesterday. "It was an electric line, and sometimes the electric poles would be down in snowstorms."

Barkley is best known as "Mule" in the Agriculture Department, where he has been a Public Buildings worker since 1922. He was a sailmaker in Baltimore and first joined the Government in 1916, making gun covers and ship awnings at the Washington Navy Yard.

The "Mule" nickname, he said, started when he delivered a set of personally ordered awnings to Agriculture Secretary Henry C. Wallace, father of former Vice President Henry A. Wallace.

Because a helper refused to carry the equipment, Barkley loaded himself down

"Somebody said, 'There's goes the mechanical mule,' and the name just stuck," Barkley explains.

Barkley will be given a party at 1 p. m. today in the Agriculture Auditorium.

Born near Cambridge, Md., he has a wife, Victoria; three sons, two daughters and six grandchildren. His Baltimore address is 832 Patterson Park ave.

Doctor Panel Warns About Cold Drugs

A panel of four doctors flashed a caution signal here yesterday in describing the use of antihistaminic drugs for four types of ailments.

There have been few, if any, "sensational" results in treatment of patients with the new drugs, they told a meeting of Phi Delta Epsilon Medical Fraternity at the Statler Hotel.

And the most widely publicized of their uses—as a "killer" or "stopper" of the common cold—is just a fallacy, said Dr. Israel Zinberg, chief of medicine at Sinai Hospital in Baltimore.

"In general practice, we have not found that the use of antihistaminic drugs has benefited colds," Dr. Zinberg said.

If the symptoms of a patient's trouble are like those of a cold and are caused by an allergy, the effect is frequently "helpful," he explained. Ten percent of Americans have an allergy of some sort, he added, but the "common cold is caused by a virus, which is not affected by antihistaminics."

Dr. Robert Stolar, assistant professor of dermatology at Georgetown University, said some antihistaminic drugs have been a "tremendous help" in reducing itching attendant to skin diseases.

Dr. Jerome A. Marks of New York said hopes that the drugs would prevent formation of ulcers by counteracting excessive bodily secretions of histamine have been shattered.

In cases of asthma and hay fever, said Dr. B. Edgar Spiegel of New York, use of the drugs should be on a "very, very individual" basis, and doctors should watch the case "very closely to determine side effects."

At a formal banquet in the Statler last night, David Lilienthal, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, accepted the fraternity's Award of Merit for his contribution to "the welfare of mankind" as a public official.

The presentation was made by Dr. Henry Falk, New York surgeon and executive secretary of the fraternity.

Fairfax 'Still' Raided; Two D. C. Men Held

Virginia police and ABC investigators yesterday knocked over a large still in Fairfax County, arresting two Washington men in the process.

Confiscated was 900 gallons of mash, according to M. K. Bryant, ABC investigator for northern Virginia, who led the raid with Arlington County Detective Russell Runyon.

The still was hidden in woods near McLean, Va., off Route 807, Bryant said. It was so carefully camouflaged that he came within 30 feet of it before recognizing it, Bryant related.

Arrested were Daniel Lawrence Mills, 34, of 1242 10th st. nw., and Thomas Ardel Hill, 41, 1225 B st. ne. Both were charged with manufacturing whisky in violation of ABC regulations, Bryant said.

Hill and Mills were placed in $1000 bond each and a hearing scheduled for January 6 in Fairfax County Trial Justice Court. Bryant said Mills claimed to be the owner of the still.

Report Due Soon on D. C. Police Work

Representative James C. Davis (D., Ga.) said yesterday he expects to receive early next wek the preliminary report on Washington law enforcement drafted by House investigators during the congressional recess.

Davis, chairman of the special House District Crime Investigating Subcommittee, said the report will be submitted by Hyman I. Fischbach, chief counsel for the subcommittee.

Out of the preliminary report will grow formal subcommittee hearings which may start late next month. Davis, by phone from his office near Atlanta, said the main work of the investigators to date has been to make thorough study of records of the Metropolitan Police Department and the United States attorney's office. He pointed out anew that the House inquiry will cover all Washington law enforcement agencies.

In their review of crime records, committee investigators are understood to have given special attention to cases of apparent leniency to criminals. The investigators have studied closely District records for whom felony charges have been dropped or reduced to permit a guilty plea on a misdemeanor charge.

Their studies have also been directed to a comparison of the anti-gambling efforts of the local police and of the United States attorney's office.

Davis emphasized that the preliminary report will point the way to further investigation rather then draw conclusions. The report will be discussed in executive sessions of the committee before decisions are reached on the next moves, Davis said.

Lane Calls Sales Tax Worthwhile

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 28 (AP).—Senator Tydings (D., Md.) and Governor Lane were principal speakers tonight at the Christmas dinner party of the Washington County Democratic Club.

Tydings dwelt mainly on foreign policy, telling the audience of some 450 the United States is "spending now to prevent war."

The Governor provided something of a report on State affairs. Lane said out of 28 million dollars in sales taxes in Maryland this year, 16 million dollars went for education, 6 million dollars for roads, 5 million dollars for health benefits.

Tydings admitted he has had to disagree with a number of the domestic policies of the Washington Administration. But he said, "I wasn't elected by the people of Maryland to goose-step with the National Administration."

Record-High Yugoslav Budget Is Approved

Belgrade, Dec. 28 (AP).—Yugoslavia's Parliament approved tonight the biggest budget in the nation's history.

The budget called for 1950 expenditures of about the equivalent of $3,474,920,000 as compared to this year's budget of $3,239,030,000.

The greater part of the increase was for military expenditures.

State Auditor Asks Alexandria Reforms

Virginia State Auditor J. Gordon Bennett yesterday recommended an overhauling of Alexandria's financial setup.

In a report he drew up at the request of the Alexandria City Council, Bennett listed 19 recommendations—some of which are called for in the city's 1950 budget and the proposed new charter.

City Manager W. Guy Ancell, who, along with the council, is studying the report, termed it an excellent one. He said he supported its recommendations "all the way down the line."

Kept in Pen and Ink

The survey, in one of its major proposals, calls for installation of a mechanized system of accounting in the city auditor's office. Presently, according to Ancell, the city's books are kept in pen and ink.

Such a system, which is provided for in the 1950 budget and the proposed charter, would make available up-to-the-minute data on city expenditures and costs, Ancell said. The city's books now are balanced monthly.

Another proposal—also in the 1950 budget and provided for by city ordinance—would establish the office of purchasing agent. Each department now does its own purchasing on requisitions signed by the city manager.

Urges Inventory System

Presently, individual departments also maintain their own inventories of supplies. Bennett's survey recommends an adequate inventory system be set up, with the purchasing agent to draw up the records and have control of them.

Collection of all city revenues—other than those which must, for practical reasons, be collected by individual departments—would be turned over to the city collector under another recommendation.

To illustrate this, Ancell pointed out that money now advanced by citizens to pay for their share in street construction is turned over to the city engineer. The city collector, he said, also should take in fees for building, plumbing and electric permits, and the like.

Along this line, the city manager strongly indorsed another recommendation of the survey: that all property owners be required to pay cash in advance the estimated cost or contract price for services to be carried out by the city, such as building of sidewalks.

No Right To Extend Credit

Presently, Ancell said, many citizens offer a note or lien against their property as their share in the cost of a project. "We have no right to extend credit," he asserted. "What we're doing in reality is loaning him the taxpayers' money."

The survey suggests that adequate cost records be maintained by the city engineer on projects undertaken by his office. According to Ancell, there is presently no check on the amount of money spent by the engineer's office on a project.

Other recommendations include annual sale of tax-delinquent land; study of procedures by the revenue commissioner to see if use of addressing machines and mechanical billing equipment would speed the job; and payment of school funds to the office of the city treasurer to be spent on order of the school board.

Arlington Delegates Are Given Suggestions for Laws

Arlington County's delegation to the Virginia General Assembly has been asked by county board members to seek laws permitting a referendum on nonpartisan local elections and restricting the powers of the State Milk Commission.

The suggestions were made at an informal closed conference Tuesday night.

The three Democratic legislators did not say what action, if any, they would take on the nonpartisan election referendum, according to board member, Mrs. Florence Cannon.

Mrs. Cannon, a nonpartisan, said the request was not indorsed by Democratic board member Alfred Frisbie.

Attending the conference were county board members Daniel Dugan, Mrs. Cannon, and Frisbie, board member-elect Robert Cox, Arlington State Senator Charles Fenwick, and county members of the House of Delegates J. Maynard Magruder and George Damm.

The legislators stated they would not move to abolish the milk commission, according to Dugan, but did promise to consider possibility of a law eliminating retail price-fixing only by the commission.

Also discussed at the conference, according to Senator Fenwick, was the possibility of establishing a series of tax districts in Arlington, through which area merchants could be taxed for construction and maintenance of parking facilities. He said the group agreed to investigate a similar Silver Spring (Md.) plan.

The Food Dollar

Senator Gillette's Agriculture Subcommittee has been trying to find out why the prices received by farmers for food products are so much lower than the prices paid by housewives for those products in raw or processed form. H. J. Heinz 2d, president of the H. J. Heinz Co., which sold 126 million dollars worth of processed foods last year, helped to unravel this mystery when he testified recently. He estimated that 32.8 cents of each of these sales dollars represented the cost of farm products; 37.9 cents offset the cost to the company of tin, glass containers, cartons, labels, advertising and transportation; salaries and wages took 24 cents; taxes, 2.4 cents, leaving the company with a net profit of 2.9 cents on each dollar of sales. And the Heinz sales dollar does not include the markup required to yield a fair profit to retail distributors of its products.

Even fresh fruits and vegetables, which do not require expensive processing, seldom reach the grocery store without careful inspection and culling. Oranges, for example, are washed, graded and packed for shipment to distributive outlets—a process that entails a large amount of labor and use of machinery. When a processed product such as pickles finally reaches the grocery stores, the housewife has to pay not only for the cucumbers, but also for grading, sorting, preserving—even advice to growers on control of pests—as well as for containers and labels, shipment and advertising charges.

Rapid transportation and refrigeration of perishable products have enormously increased the variety of food products offered consumers. Advertising has created new markets for unfamiliar foods and increased the demand for familiar products. Moreover, attractive packaging and careful preparation of food products is demanded by the American people. All these operations cost money and reduce the percentage of the food dollar reaching the farmer in payment for his product. At the same time, they create new outlets for farm products that once did not exist. And the farmer benefits accordingly, along with a host of processors, distributors, advertisers and transportation agencies who provide the goods and services needed to put food products in consumer hands in good condition, whether fresh or processed.

Excising Excises

In the absence of Administration budget estimates for 1951, Representative Joe Martin's call for across-the-board repeal of excise taxes is patently politics. Mr. Martin's only formula for closing the 600-million-dollar gap in revenue which repeal would leave is "less spending." With no assurance either that spending will actually be reduced or that other revenue will be available, this amounts to an exercise in metaphysics.

Excise taxes, of course, are nuisances which are popular with nobody. Mr. Martin's request for more signatures on his discharge petition is obviously an effort to steal the spotlight from the Administration, which through various sources has hinted at an excise repeal measure of its own. There is, however, an important qualification. President Truman is reportedly predicating his plan on assurance of other means of making up the lost revenue.

A good many persons other than Mr. Martin are concerned over deficit financing in a period of prosperity. There is just one cause for the deficit—more spending than income. Congress has assented to this spending. Unless legislators do a more effective job of cutting expenses for 1951 than they have to date, the deficit may continue or increase. Under these conditions it is both unrealistic and irresponsible to talk of a general excise repeal by itself.

There are, to be sure, several specific excise taxes which are harmful. Communications and transportation taxes were imposed during the war as a means of discouraging unnecessary use of these facilities. Certainly the need for restricting travel has long since passed; moreover, the effect of the transportation tax on shippers is multiplied in increased prices of goods all down the line. Likewise, the oleomargarine tax is a discriminatory measure which has never had any real justification. Congress may want to consider the elimination of these taxes irrespective of revenue. Beyond this, however, prudence calls for having either alternative fund measures or the budgetary cuts in hand before eliminating sources of income. In any case realistic action on excise taxes must await the President's budget message, and then must consist of sober appraisal of the facts rather than mere political maneuvering.

Legislative Budgets

The chief advantage of the omnibus appropriation bill that is to take the place of multiple appropriations bills is that it will provide Congress with an over-all figure of the cost of proposed spending programs, based on the recommendations of its various Appropriations Committees. A consolidated bill embodying the results of such committee deliberations will not be ready for presentation until late in the session, when Congress will be in a better position to estimate the tax revenues of the next fiscal year. The Reorganization Act of 1946 provided that a Joint Congressional Budget Committee should report to Congress each year by February 15 a legislative budget for the coming fiscal year including estimates of total expenditures and receipts. The act also provided that the committee report should be accompanied by a concurrent resolution adopting this budget and fixing the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditures. This legislative budget plan has proved unworkable, because it entailed setting an over-all spending figure at too early a date, in advance of detailed hearings on appropriation requests. Moreover, under the present system of piecemeal appropriations it is virtually impossible to keep total appropriations within a predetermined over-all figure.

The National Committee for Strengthening Congress, therefore, suggests that the Joint Budget Committee should review the items in the consolidated appropriations bill and make a report to Congress about the first of May, embodying its own recommendations for increases or decreases in total appropriations or in revenue and/or increases or decreases in the public debt. Although this method of procedure would be an improvement on the present legislative budget plan, which requires the Joint Budget Committee to engage in a guessing contest, the committee would be of little use as an agent for intelligent control of spending unless it had made a continuous, intensive and independent study of the various appropriations measures included in the final appropriation bill. That kind of inquiry calls for a large staff of experts to examine estimates in detail and determine whether expenditures can be reduced without impairing efficiency and where they should be made.

The form of the legislative budget is also important, since Congress is concerned about the amount of expenditures in any given year rather than total appropriations. Senator Byrd, for instance, who has long advocated adoption of a single appropriation bill, stresses the necessity of translating appropriations into terms of annual expenditures when Congress is considering spending proposals. An omnibus bill of this kind would, no doubt, enable Congress to establish more effective controls over budgeting and afford opportunity for giving the legislative budget plan another trial under more favorable conditions. However, procedural reforms, essential though they are, are no insurance against wasteful expenditures or deficit financing. They merely provide Congress with the tools for doing a better job. It remains to be seen whether a single appropriation bill bringing together all spending requests will reduce or increase the temptation to log-rolling. There is room for considerable doubt on that score. Another formidable objection to the single appropriation bill is that it would make it even more difficult than at present for the President to exercise his veto power in connection with appropriations. And it might encourage the reprehensible practice of attaching unacceptable riders to the appropriations bill that would compel the President to veto it, thereby tying up the funds of all the Government departments and agencies.

In appraising plans for improving budgetary procedure it should never be forgotten that cuts in budget expenditures or additions to or reductions in taxes cannot be viewed solely as expedients for bringing about a balance between income and outgo. They also entail changes in policies and programs that may conflict with the objectives of the Administration in power and arouse violent partisan opposition. If Congress succeeds in developing a legislative budget through procedural reforms it should not be regarded as a rival but rather as a revised form of the executive budget, based on recognition of the fact that, under our form of government, Congress and the Chief Executive are jointly responsible for working out spending and taxing programs that both can support. That calls for close cooperation between the two branches of government. Hence, it might be better to assign the task of preparing the legislative budget to the majority policy committees of the House and Senate, as the National Committee for Strengthening Congress tentatively suggests, instead of to the Joint Budget Committee set up under the Reorganization Act. Such an arrangement would probably intensify the partisan conflicts that inevitably arise when the Chief Executive and the congressional majority do not belong to the same party, but it would, at any rate, have the advantage of making the party in control of Congress responsible for the legislative budget.

Forgotten Men

During this holiday season it is particularly shocking and heart-rending to know that more than 17,000 mental patients in veterans' hospitals have received no visits from families or friends over the past year. Doubtless this is a situation repeated in many civilian hospitals, and the neglect is no less pathetic wherever it happens. But there is something almost sinful about this sort of treatment of veterans, many of whom acquired their illnesses defending the homes and lives of the persons who have abandoned them. The best care in the world does not substitute for the feeling of dignity and security which only family and friends can give. Lack of this essential therapy probably is preventing many patients from making the kind of adjustments that would permit their return to society. Certainly it ought to be a New Year's resolution for everyone who knows of such instances to expend a little human kindness in remedying this tragedy.

Cornering A Cornerstone

The elaborate plans for the renovation and reconstruction of the White House have, it seems, revived curiosity about the location of the cornerstone. Of course in any rectangular building such as the White House was originally, there are actually four cornerstones. The mystery, however, is which of them was hollowed out, according to old custom, as a repository for documents, coins, artifacts and other odds and ends deemed of probable interest to a remote posterity.

If anyone bothered to make a record of the precise location of this repository, it has apparently been lost. The problem is further complicated by the fact that the front of the White House is really the back. That is to say, the true facade is the southern one, confronting what is now called the Presidential Ellipse; and the northern, or Pennsylvania ave. entrance, through which pass the visitors of state and the guests at presidential receptions and dinners, is, in a manner of speaking, only a back door.

The cornerstone, wherever it is, was laid on October 13, 1792; and among those participating in the ceremonies were the members of the Freemasonic lodge of Georgetown. This was congruous enough, since the architect, James Hoban, was a Mason, as President Washington was also. However, the President did not attend the ceremonies, for he was then in Philadelphia, which was still the Capital. Apparently the only surviving contemporary record of the ceremony is one that appeared in the Charleston (S. C.) City Gazette for November 15, 1792. Under date of October 20 a correspondent in Philadelphia reported that:

> On Saturday the 13th, inst, the first stone was laid in the South-west corner of the President's house in the city of Washington by the Free Masons of George-town and its vicinity, who assembled on the occasion. Under the stone was laid a plate of polished brass with the following inscription: "This first Stone of the President's House was laid the 13th Day of October, 1792, and in the 17th year of the Independence of the United States of America. [Then follows a list of names beginning with President Washington, and including those of the building commissioners, the architect and "Collen Williamson, Master Mason"; and beneath them the motto "Vivat Republica."]

This account has received a strong circumstantial corroboration from experiments made with an Army mine detector. A louder buzzing was recorded at the southwest corner than at any of the other three. This was ascribed to the presence of the brass plate.

For ourselves we are well satisfied to let it go at that. However, we understand that a plan is under contemplation for opening the cornerstone as part of the exercises of the Sesquicentennial celebration next year. If this requires any unnecessary tearing out of the wall, we consider the plan ill-advised and earnestly hope that it will be dropped. The contemplated rehabilitation of the White House will, at best, cost a good deal more than would have been required to build an entirely new and modern presidential residence. But the reasons for attempting to preserve the White House are, of course, sentimental and historical rather than practical; for in the eyes of most Americans it is more than a mere building; it is also a symbol. Since this is so, the reconstruction, it seems to us, should go no further than is necessary to the safety and comfort of the future occupants.

Besides, at this point in our historical and political evolution it might be taken as a bad omen to tamper with something inscribed Vivat Republica.

HEIGHTS

Over the mountains
The cloud mountains blow,
And far in the valley
The white whirling snow
Makes mountains below.

We who love laughter
And winds that are strong,
Who shatter the stillness
About us with song
The white miles along,

Ought we not rather
In silence to trace
Our tracks like thin ribbon
Across the white face
Of earth as we race?

It may be the rolling
Of time into night
Beyond our discerning
Will speed from the sight
These joys in its flight.

Oh then might we fashion
Earth's peace to our wills,
Had we for remembrance
The silence that fills
These white conquered hills.

New Treaty Basis

The possibility of negotiations with Russia on a program of demilitarizing atomic energy and partial disarmament was recently mentioned by the Alsop brothers and discussed in the December 23 letter by Eugene Burr. Mr. Burr feels that negotiations would be worthless and that we must stand up for the cold war for an unpredictable time because, in the absence of a world court backed by enforcing powers, the Soviets cannot be expected to keep any agreement arrived at.

It would be a mistake to assume that all non-Soviet governments are keeping their international obligations. If we abstain for a moment from that hypocrisy, which Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr has called "the most significant moral characteristic of nations," we might as well realize that reliance in international treaties was never perfect and has more and more deteriorated in recent times.

The reason for this decline is obvious. International law has been based so far only upon the so-called natural law; that is, a common tradition of certain principles of civilization. One of these principles provided for the protection of the civilian population during wars. Both world wars, by ignoring this rule, have destroyed any confidence in natural and therefore also in international law.

But we cannot continue the cold war for an unpredictable time. Nor can we expect a change either in the Russian system of government or in the mode of thinking of the Soviets. Nations, moreover, cannot long live without mutual agreements.

There remains only one thing to do. We must try to achieve a new foundation for international law so that we can confide in treaties. Mr. Burr has correctly stated the conditions of such a new basis. They are compulsory jurisdiction of a world court and a sufficient supranational police force.

No doubt about the outcome of negotiations on such a comprehensive plan can free us from our responsibility to try this only remaining approach to a foundation for peace, international law and economic sanity.

Forced Listening

About three weeks ago my brother, who had just come to Washington and who had not had enough time to fully unpack, became critically ill. During this period I had to ride on Capital Transit's radio-equipped buses and streetcars to do what I could for my stricken family. And I had to listen to dance music while I rode.

When my brother died a few days ago I had to attend to many things necessitated by his death. I had to listen to the same type of music when I had to ride on the buses and streetcars.

The members of my family and I cannot adequately express how difficult it was and it is for us to tolerate music in transit while we mourn the loss of a loved one. Yet we hold no ill feeling toward the Capital Transit Co. and the Station WWDC. We pity them for their inhumanity. EDWARD K. MERAT.
Washington.

Going down on the bus recently I was privileged to witness one of the most powerful arguments yet advanced against equipping streetcars and buses with radio.

I boarded the bus and became aware of the strains of "Adeste Fidèles" rising in considerable volume within. And there were no speakers—this was not a radio-equipped bus at all!

I glanced around in puzzlement, and it dawned on me that this music was being provided, not by a disc jockey, but by the courtesy of the passengers themselves. Every part of the bus fairly rocked with joyful sound.

Looking at this thing one way, you might say that singing carried a note of defiance from a little group banded together, even if only for a moment, against a disordered mechanized world.

And it makes you wonder if this thing would ever have come to pass if, overhead, records had been blazing, blotting out this true spirit with a synthetic one, plastic, automatic and quite soulless.

NELSON C. ROSENBERG.
Washington.

School Crowding

I read with a great deal of interest the full-page advertisement of December 20 furnished by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People concerning the Central High School-Cardozo High School situation. I wish that many of our public-spirited citizens could become as enthusiastic about the entire school building program as they are about one small initial part of it.

It is my hope for the coming year that all of our interested citizens will devote more of their time to the over-all building program, and encouragement of Congress to furnish the bulk sum needed. It is difficult to understand how so many people can become aroused over radio noises on buses and streetcars and other nonessential community interests, and still watch part-time classes, crowded school conditions, and other inadequacies to a wholesome school life. Are we here in the Nation's Capital to go on watching the present generation of youngsters being poorly educated as the representatives of this and other communities in the future?

GEORGE R. HAMMOND.
President, D. C. Public School Association.

Admitting Germanic Refugees

President Truman on the occasion of the lighting of the National Community Christmas Tree reminded the Nation of the plight of the thousands of homeless people in Europe. In his desire to offer sanctuary to the homeless and persecuted of other lands, the President is in harmony with the oldest and most honorable tradition of this country.

This generosity has, of course, in every generation been opposed by Scrooge-like attempts to bar the door on the part of many Americans, who have apparently not understood that freedom like other good things should be shared with others. In 1924 the Scrooge spirit in immigration matters succeeded in passing the present severely restrictive law. More recently certain troglodytes in the United States Senate blocked the efforts of Mr. Truman to provide for the admission of displaced persons on a scale commensurate with the numbers of such homeless people and with our ability to absorb them.

With Congress about to reconvene and the Senate obligated to take immediate action on the amendments to the Displaced Persons Act, it is appropriate to take a look at the refugee situation in Europe. Today western Europe is a vast refugee depot. In addition to half a million or more DPs who prefer the bleak monotony of the camps to certain death or slave labor in their homelands behind the Iron Curtain, there are in Germany and Austria 12 million persons of German ethnic origin who were in 1945 and 1946 expelled from East Prussia, Silesia, and various other parts of Europe.

Western Germany no longer has access to Germany's breadbasket, which is, of course, in the maw of the Soviet Moloch to the east, and yet 7½ million of these so-called expellees have crowded into this area which cannot even house and feed its native population. Most of these people have nothing in the way of possessions; frequently whole towns of people of German ethnic origin were put on the road with 24 hours notice to evacuate the area and with only what could be carried by the adults on their backs.

Msgr. Swanstrom, director of War Relief Services, National Catholic Welfare Conference, in a recent article in the Washington Catholic Review describes the plight of western Germany in meeting this gigantic relief problem as follows: "If the United States had suffered the total destruction of all its principal industrial centers and also counted about 40 percent of its dwellings as damaged or destroyed, and if it had surrendered 20 percent of its food producing area, and then had to accept the entire population of Canada and Mexico as destitute refugees, the picture would be like that of Germany in 1945 and 1946."

To relieve western Germany of an impossible population resettlement problem—a potentially dangerous Lebensraum issue in fact—it is essential that Congress pass legislation to admit substantial numbers of German expellees. These people would, I predict, be an asset if a little care in selection were exercised. Msgr. Swanstrom points out: "There are among the expellees many groups who come from far away and who by the fact of their history and experience are natural pioneers. These are the Germanic groups from Yugoslavia, Romania, and Hungary, whose fame as hardy farmers and colonizers is well known. These people are not attached to German soil because their forbears have not lived on it for generations . . . The Germanic groups from east Europe could make excellent emigrants."

In dealing with this problem it is to be hoped that we shall not play the stingy and un-American role that has been our part with respect to the DPs. The record to date shows that England, Scotland, and northern Ireland with a combined land area less than New York and New England and a population of 50 million have admitted more DPs than have we, and in addition have welcomed 150,000 members of the Polish army. Our present DP law is so hedged about with limitations, preferences, priorities, and restrictions that it is almost unworkable, which is, of course, the result of senatorial troglodyte tactics to defeat the purpose of the program.

Mental Hospitals

I must congratulate you for the December 23 story on the 200 aged sane locked in St. Elizabeths.

The lawmakers have an inescapable duty to work for reforms to end the railroading of sane people to insane asylums, abolish cruelty practiced upon the inmates and secure humane care and treatment for those confined.

It is up to the legal profession to see that those who are accused of insanity have the right to have a fair trial; the right to appeal and the privilege of receiving and sending out mail. It is my further belief that the Bar Association should use its influence to provide sufficient safeguards for the inmates, and to bring about laws that are sufficiently proper for the so-called mentally ill to effect their removal without difficulties when they are properly entitled to freedom. Caught In The Middle

By Malvina Lindsay

Prime-Of-Lifers

ABOUT THE END of next week millions of persons who draw pay checks will receive an additional awareness of their tomorrows. For on their checks will show up an increase of 50 percent in the witholding tax for old age and survivors insurance.

And when Congress reconvenes, a lot of talk will be heard about pensions. The proposed increase of about 70 percent in Federal security benefits is due for action in the Senate. Other pension bills are likely to be offered. The plight of the man or woman past 65 is engrossing the Nation.

But what of the in-between citizen, the one from 40 to 65? If out of a job, he—or she—is frequently branded as too old to work. Yet there may be 10, 15, even 25 years ahead before the pension age is reached.

As retirement plans are increasingly set up by large companies, the trend grows to keep the average age of workers low and thus save on premiums. Yet the 40-65 age span is that in which most persons are at the height of their capabilities.

HOWEVER, such persons, which Ewan Clague, Commissioner of Labor Statistics, calls the "near-old," often through no fault of their own find themselves seeking new work. Their families are at this time at their costliest, children being in college or high school. Homes may be not quite paid for, still in danger of being lost.

Jobless men in their 50's, women in their 40's, particularly face this hazard. As the cry for pensions at 65 or 60 grows, their fifth wheel status will intensify. And they are here to stay, for their nonpension years at least. Life expectancy for the white male is now 66 years as against 48 years in 1900, for women a few years longer.

Comfortable citizens whose favorite cliche of the 1930s was "anybody can find work who wants it" may now say that people in their forties and fifties can always find work if they're "good enough." True, the exceptionally capable may. And as long as employment demands are high, the forties group may have a run of luck. But those in the fifties already are finding barriers being raised.

Some pessimists on the whole pension set-up predict the pension age will finally be lowered to 50, if not 45. And since youth's education is being lengthened, they even foresee a time when all citizens between 25 and 35 will be carrying the rest of the country on their backs.

HOWEVER the 40-to-65 group generally wants jobs rather than handouts—and it is showing signs of fighting for them. There is increasing demand that employers hire—and retire as well—by physical and mental fitness rather than by calendar age. There has been some agitation in New York to have the fair employment practices law amended to forbid discrimination because of age as well as because of race, color and creed. Trade and professional organizations in some places are coming to the aid of the unemployed persons in their prime and doing educational work with employers in behalf of them. And considering the growing voting strength of the 40-to-65 men and women, they are not as likely to be kicked around as they were in the 1930's.

There is also talk of colleges for those past 45 in which new skills could be learned. Women particularly need such training. The many middle-aged women trying to crack the labor market—often by necessity, yet who can do "nothing particularly"—give gray hairs to employment counselors.

Much depends on how the individual, middle-aged or elderly, is able to meet the employers' challenge. How much physical fitness has he cultivated? How low a biological age can he offer if a test on that is provided? How much mental resiliency has he? Adaptability? Self confidence? Sense of keeping up with the world? What has he done by intelligent diet to meet the goal of American nutritionists—that of adding seven years to the prime of life, the period of effective productivity?

The answer to all of this goes back primarily to the younger jobholders, many of whom next week will look twice at the withholding deduction on their pay checks. How many will think of their preparedness for the future in terms other than a pension at 65?

Today And Tomorrow

British And American Elections

FOR THE British as for ourselves 1950 is an election year, and so for many months to come the men who must lead, or would like to lead, their countries, must also lead their parties. They will be like a man driving a fast car around sharp corners through crowded streets, his right arm holding tightly the girl on the seat beside him while he keeps turning his head to argue with an angry fellow on the back seat.

Lippmann

We know that our own election campaign must last until November. The British election must be over by midsummer at the latest. It might be over by the end of February. The Prime Minister can choose the date, and two weeks ago in London it was not known, except perhaps to a very few of the inner cabinet—to Bevin, Morrison, and Cripps—whether he had actually made his choice. The Conservative leaders and bosses did not know, nor did the junior leaders of the Labor Party. However, for a number of reasons—such as the fact that the President of France is due to make a state visit to London early in March, that a new register of voters comes into force about the middle of March, and that the budget has to be presented early in April,—the choice of dates for the election had been narrowed down. March and April were said to be ruled out. Either the election will be held by February 23 or after May 1.

In any event the chances are that the British people will vote at a time when they will not know much that is vital to a true judgment of their prospects and their policy. If they vote in February, they will certainly not know what is to be done about Marshall aid even this year, much less next year and thereafter. There are momentous decisions now in the making which must affect Britain, the European continent, the Commonwealth and Asia. But in this country the issues to be decided have not been publicly defined, nor even defined and decided within the Truman Administration. With our own election impending it would be a miracle if Congress were given clear enough leadership to debate and settle the great issues before it recesses this summer.

YET THE British people will be arguing in the dark unless they known what we mean to do about Marshall aid in the third year and in the fourth and last year, and what we mean to do after that to close the gap between the exports which the rest of the world needs from us and its capacity to earn the dollars to pay for our exports.

The real problem of Britain is now masked because, on the one hand, Britain receives Marshall aid from America and, on the other hand, because she is paying out an equivalent amount to the holders of the sterling balances. Britain receives about a billion dollars of "unrequited" imports from North America; she delivers about a billion dollars of "unrequited" exports to India, Parkistan, Egypt, Iraq and some European countries. Thus the British position has in it great elements which are artificial and impermanent. Though in fact the British people are producing about as much as they are consuming—except as they are living in part on their own capital—yet they are not earning all that they get from North America nor are they being paid for all that they give to Asia, Africa and Europe.

The great issues, which will have to be defined and in large measure decided in 1950, arise from this situation. They are not easy to understand. They are easier to understand than Einstein's latest theory, but that is not saying much. No one, I think, understands them fully. They are enormously difficult to explain. No one can prove conclusively that he has found the right answer, and yet the world cannot wait, 20 years, as Einstein has said it must wait for proof of his theory, to know for sure whether the proposals put forward are right. The issues are almost impossible to translate into attractive and honest slogans for the two elections that must be held this year in the English-speaking world.

NONETHELESS we shall have to do our best, relying on good sense and instinct to see us through. When the best expert opinion has been consulted, there will remain, I believe, a net deposit of general truth which we can all accept:—that the United States will continue for many years to come to export more than it imports; that the difference must be covered by easy credits and by gifts, and in some measure by private investment. That southern Asia and other economically backward areas of the globe must be financed if they are to find peace.

That a system of financing them can now be used, beginning this year with Britain, to replace the Marshall Plan. That as we liquidate the Marshall Plan in Europe and develop a new system for Asia, we may be able to achieve two great purposes at once: to liberate Britain, and soon thereafter western Europe, from dependence on the American subsidy and at the same time to keep what remains of Asia in friendly relations with the Western world.

THESE ARE great purposes, could we adopt them and achieve them. For what we are facing in Asia is above all the tremendous risk that its connections with the Western world will be broken. They would be broken, of course, if all of Asia became Communist and owed its allegiance to Moscow. I do not think that is likely to happen everywhere—certainly not very soon. But what could happen, and will, I think, if we refuse our responsibilities, is that much and most of Asia will become a no-man's land of quareling principalities and factions, cut up within itself, and cut off from the Western world by its own disorder.

And in Europe what we are facing, I have come to believe, is that great nations which should be our partners in the promotion of peace will grow so habituated to being our clients that they cease to contribute their own best judgment to the problems of the day. The Marshall Plan has done much good that it was imperative to do. The worst aspect of it is that we are not getting from Britain and from France their own true judgment of the great issue. They have had to think about the Appropriations Committees of Congress when what we needed desperately is their independent, unfrightened, uninfluenced, contribution to the problems which we cannot possibly know enough to solve all by ourselves.

That is why the sooner we can extricate them and ourselves from the Marshall Plan, substituting another system of stabilizing the world economy, the better for us and for them.

Panam's Christmas

By Marquis Childs

Dangers In Airline Monopoly

THE STOCKTAKING indulged in at this time of year is apt to be cynical and even edged with disillusion. But there is at least one citizen in these United States who has every reason to be heartily grateful for a whee of a Christmas.

Childs

That is Juan T. Trippe, president of Pan American Airways. Three days before Christmas the Civil Aeronautics Board released the report of Examiner Thomas L. Wrenn recommending the merger of Pan-Am and American Overseas Airlines. This is a big and important step toward the goal that is Trippe's lifelong ambition—a single American airline operating in the foreign field, and that airline naturally will be Pan Am.

As so often with our giving and receiving, this latest example seems to follow the scriptural knowledge that "to him who hath shall be given." Through his extraordinary organizing capacity, his zeal and his ambition, Trippe has built an empire of phenomenal power. It has been called a state within a state and the road ahead seems to have been cleared for an even greater measure of sovereignty.

True, the CAB can reverse the findings of its examiner. If the board also rules for the merger, which was engineered by Trippe, then under the law President Truman must make the final ruling and he can reverse the board. But in view of the examiner's report and in the light of persistent rumors that the way has long been prepared by pressure, persuasion and pelf, this seems unlikely.

AT THE end of lengthy public hearings into the merger, Public Counsel James L. Highsaw, jr., and William F. Kennedy filed a brief saying it would almost certainly result in a monopoly. And that monopoly airline, according to the brief, would have greater powers than the United States Government.

Should the merger go through, one competing line would be left on the North Atlantic run. This would be Trans World Airline. But TWA has protested that it probably could not withstand the kind of competition Pan-Am united with American could bring to bear.

Furthermore, TWA has just filed a brief charging that Pan-Am is putting over a "hoax" in order to cut in on TWA's most lucrative field of operation. That rests on TWA's exclusive right to enter Rome. Now with the Holy Year coming up and thousands of American pilgrims flying to Rome, the CAB has granted Pan-Am the right to operate "charter flights" which, according to TWA's brief, will be the equivalent of regular operation.

To the average American this may seem the kind of struggle for private power that has characterized the rise of the giant corporations and, therefore, it is no business of his. But in some respects it is literally his business. Subsidies provided by the taxpayer have contributed a great deal to the development of the private airlines.

But in another, and perhaps even more important, respect, it is the business of the average citizen. This is because the development of civil aviation is directly related to military security.

A GROUP of former air transport officers of the Navy and the Air Force, with some support on Capitol Hill, are promoting what has come to be known as the air merchant marine bill. Under it the United States would finance the manufacture of transport planes—particularly cargo planes—which would be leased to the airlines for opeartion. In this way the air-carrying capacity of the Nation would be greatly augmented so that an emergency like the Berlin blockade or war itself would not find the armed forces desparately short of cargo planes.

But the Air Transport Association and the big lines oppose this proposal. A confidential document being circulated through the industry quotes Robert Ramspeck, executive vice president of the Air Transport Association, as warning that the air merchant marine bill would bring the airlines "closer and closer to Government ownership as time passed."

If the danger of Government ownership lurks in this bill, there is a far greater danger of nationaliaztion in the trend toward monopoly. It would be so easy for Government to take over a single airline operating with supra-Government powers in the foreign field. That is one reason monopoly seems to me a mistake.

Nationalization of a service used by the traveling public tends to bring lowered standards and a general bureaucratic indifference. But so also does private monopoly when it is unchallenged by competition.

A. & P. Aide Calls Antitrust Suit Move to Destroy Competition

New York, Dec. 28 (AP).—The Government's Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. antitrust suit was described by a company official today as an attempt to impose a new economic policy that would eliminate competition.

John C. Brennan, vice president of the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., told the American Marketing Association at its winter conference that Federal antitrust lawyers are "not trying to preserve competition, but to protect competitors."

"We say they are trying, by court decree, to impose a new economic policy on this country that will discourage any businessman from doing a better job than his competitor in giving his consumers a better deal," he said.

Brennan said the A. & P. policy of direct buying and elimination of in-between costs and handling operations not only had enabled it to lower its prices, but also had helped independent grocers. To meet the competition, he said, they pressed their wholesalers for greater efficiency and lower costs.

"In addition," he continued, "tens of thousands of individual store owners have banded together to do their own buying on a mass basis so that they, too, can bypass the in-between operations and costs, and so that they, too, can sell more cheaply to their customers."

Brennan said A. & P.'s manufacturing operations were "not for the purpose of making big manufacturing profits, but simply to help us give our customers quality food at low prices. You certainly can't make a profit by selling something to yourself."

In an earlier address at the final session of the two-day conference, Prof. Paul H. Nystrom of Columbia University questioned the economic soundness of the 40-hour, five-day week.

"Whether the economy of this country can continue as a self-maintained and surplus producing economy under a 40-hour, five-day work week has never been proved or demonstrated," said Nystrom, professor of marketing in Columbia's Graduate School of Business.

With Shirley Povich

IT'S PRETTY clear now that John James Jachym and his well-heeled financial angel, Hugh A. Grant, did not buy into the Washington baseball club merely to hold hands with Clark Griffith, or sit contentedly at his feet.

Both Griffith and Jachym have been purring their cordiality toward each other but it is obvious that Jachym and his backer did not separate themselves from $550,000 simply to make a new friend. They want in, in the active operation of the Washington club and have already wedged a heavy foot in the door, with their 40 percent ownership.

POVICH

It's believable, though, when Jachym says he has no intention of starting a stockholders' war that might unseat Griffith from the presidency of the club. He has high doubts that he could win it, anyway, and is confident that he can work with Griffith to the best interest of both.

The prime reason that Grant backed Jachym was the latter young man's high energy in organizing the stock deal and wildfire enthusiasm for operating a major league club. Jachym won't be appeased by any minor role delegated to him by Griffith. It could yet be a stockholders' war, though, if the Nats' president doesn't extend to Jachym the offer of peace with dignity in the form of an important office.

SOME OF GRIFFITH'S initial dismay at finding himself with a new and somewhat mysterious partner has vanished. The old gentleman was genuinely disturbed, even alarmed, when Jachym refused to disclose whose money interests he represented. Griffith put the question to him bluntly, but Jachym explained that he was pledged to secrecy until a later date.

"Don't tell me you represent Bill Veeck," Griffith exploded. "I won't have that man in business with me. I'll fight him."

On that score, Jachym could give him quick assurances. It wasnt Veek, and Griffith was appeased. But not completely. He resented the fact that he was kept in the dark by Jachym and first learned the identity of Chief Backer Grant from the newspaper accounts. Young Jachym wasn't getting off to the nicest kind of a start with Griffith.

The bright young Mr. Jachym, meanwhile, is making no attempt to crash the tight little family group that has been operating the club. He prefers to be invited into the official family, and will wait it out if the wait isn't too long.

JACHYM AND GRANT came up with a whopping good bargain in their deal for the Washington stock. "A few hours after it was announced, I had offers to sell at a $100,000 profit," said Jachym. "I could quit right now and be a big winner, but I don't want to be a baseball broker. I want to run a big league ball team, or at least help run it."

The mystery is, of course, that the 40 percent holdings of the Richardson family could be laying around for so many years, and available, without purchasers who could almost rely on an 8-percent dividend. Under Griffith's operations, the club paid that even as a last-place outfit. Perhaps even more mysterious was Griffith's slowness in trying to obtain a majority interest in the years when it was available.

Now, suddenly, that little semianonymous group of Washington stockholders who for 30 years have been wedged in the stamp of the Griffith-Richardson voting interests, discover themselves with a thrilling balance of power. They hold the remaining 15 percent, a dozen of them, and for the first time they are important in the operation of the Washington club.

GRIFFITH HAS enough proxies going into the annual stockholders meeting Tuesday to remain securely in control, but no success has been reported in his attempts to buy up additional shares. The stockholders' reaction has been that they will vote with Griffith but won't sell to him. And the Grant-Jachym interests have been quietly probing the list of stockholders, too.

Grant's interest in the Nats stemmed from his college days here in the early '30s when he was an avid Joe Cronin fan. Jachym used to watch the Nats in the early '40s while stationed here as a marine. He got into the games on a pass issued by the late William V. Richardson, Griffith's original partner. He never presumed that he would succeed Richardson in that role.

While he was yet working for the Detroit Tigers three weeks ago, Jachym accompanied Manager Red Rolfe to the minor league meeting in Baltimore. Rolfe suggested at the time that an enterprising young man might find it profitable to buy into the Washington club. Jachym was bursting to tell him, but didn't, that Rolfe was talking to that energetic young man and that the closing of the deal was a matter of hours.

Jack Lovelock, Olympic Mile Champ, Killed by Subway Cars

New York, Dec. 28 (AP).—Dr. Jack Lovelock, a slender, curly-haired athlete who came out of New Zealand to become the world's greatest mile runner in the mid-thirties, died under a subway train in Brooklyn today.

Three cars of an eight-car local ground over his body after he apparently had suffered an attack of dizziness and fallen upon the track.

Shortly before, the 39-year-old former world and Olympic record-holder had phoned his American-born wife, Cynthia, that he felt ill and was returning home from Manhattan's Hospital for Special Surgery, where he was a staff member.

United Press reported that Patrick Hayden, the subway motorman, said he saw Lovelock topple to the tracks but that he couldn't stop the train until three cars had passed over the body. Police said Lovelock's eyesight was bad and that his glasses were in his pocket at the time of the accident. Lovelock's brother-in-law, W. G. James, identified the body.

A seemingly effortless runner, Lovelock gave perhaps his most brilliant performance in the 1936 Olympics at Berlin when he set a new world and games record of 3 minutes, 47-8 seconds in winning the 1500 meters race, metric equivalent of the mile.

In that triumph he put on a thrilling stretch spurt to run away from 11 of the world's greatest distance stars and finish 6 yards ahead of Glenn Cunningham of Kansas, the American mile champion.

Earlier, in July of 1933, the shy, diffident Oxford scholar had set a world's record of 4:07.6 for the mile in a dual meet at Princeton between Oxford-Cambridge and Princeton-Cornell. It was a stirring duel in which Bill Bonthron of Princeton also lowered the existing standard with his time of 4:08.7.

Both the world records for 1500 meters and 1 mile now are held by Gundar Haegg of Sweden at 3:43 and 4:01.4, respectively, but Lovelock took his Olympics mark with him in death today.

Hoyas Arrive Late, Get 2-Gun Salute In El Paso

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

El Paso, Tex., Dec. 28.—Almost 11 hours after it left Washington's National Airport, Georgetown's Sun Bowl football party arrived here tonight to be greeted by a hearty two-gun welcome.

Its chartered plane arrived at 7 p.m. (Eastern Standard Time) after stopping off for more than an hour at Memphis, Tenn. Strong headwinds slowed the 1748 air-mile flight.

Texas Western Already There

The Georgetown boys were greeted at the airport by Sun Bowl officials and whisked downtown for a colorful parade and formal reception in gaily decorated San Jacinto Plaza.

Texas Western, Hoya foe in the January 2 game here, welcomed the Hoyas, with President Wilson H. Elkins and Football Coach Jack Curtice doing the honors.

Mayor Dan Duke and a host of bowl officials took part in the program. It was staged in chilly early evening weather under a sign reading, "Howdy, Hoyas, Have Fun in the Sun."

Originally, only 36 football players were scheduled to make the trip. At the last minute, it was discovered there was room for two more.

Preston, Comiskey Make Plane

The lucky two were Halfback Johnny Preston, a senior, and Guard Jim Comiskey, guard. Both are from Beverly, Mass. Paged in a movie theater in their hometown at 8 o'clock Tuesday night, they grabbed a plane from Boston to New York City.

They were forced to take a "milk" train leaving the big town at 1:15 a. m. and didn't arrive at Union Station until 7:30 a. m. Preston and Comiskey rushed to National Airport in a cab and the Georgetown plane waited, delaying its departure by 40 minutes. It finally left at 8:10 a. m.

IN SHORT—On the Memphis stop, Georgetown got a chance to rub shoulders with North Carolina's Cotton Bowl bound Tar Heels . . . The Carolina squad landed shortly after the Hoyas and the boys milled around together waiting for refueling and more chow . . . Charley Justice, looking fit, said he was—and ready to go against Rice . . . Surprisingly, in mufti, the Carolina boys don't look like a big squad . . . Billy Hayes, Arlington's contribution to Coach Carl Snavely's bowl team, was lucky to be along . . . The former W-L High star revealed that he was a miraculous survivor of an auto crash that occurred when he was driving home from Chapel Hill for the Christmas holidays . . . Hayes fell asleep at the wheel near Richmond and his car was demolished . . . Fortunately, Hayes suffered only a bump on his knee . . . He says the knee feels a bit stiff but he expects to be in top shape January 2 . . . Quoted 13-point underdog in the East and even in El Paso, Georgetown is figured to lose by 6 to 7 points in the betting . . .

THAT MAN GRANT—Oil man Hugh Grant is shown at his desk in Bradford, Pa., yesterday as he confirmed newspaper accounts that he had purchased a $400,000 interest in the Washington Nats. He said he does not plan to take an active part in the club's operations in the near future

Nats Act Without Jachym

Christman Sold to Seattle In 1st Deal Under New Setup

Mark Christman, 35-year-old utility infielder, was sold to the Seattle club of the Pacific Coast League yesterday in the Nats' first player deal under their new financial set-up.

The sale price was unannounced, but Vice President Calvin Griffith declared it to be "less than the $10,000 waiver price."

John J. Jachym, who represents the new 40-percent stockholding interest in the Nats, did not figure in the Christman sale.

With the Nats last season Christman was relegated to a player-coach role. He figured in 49 games and batted .214. He substituted at all positions in the infield.

The Nats bought Christman from the Browns in the spring of 1947. He played shortstop and third base for two seasons and, in 1948, led the league's shortstops in fielding.

He broke into the majors with Detroit in 1938, and in 1943 was one of the six players swapped to the Browns in the deal for Buck Newsom. He was a top star for the Browns in their pennant victory in 1944.

Calvin Griffith pointed out that George Genovese, drafted from Hollywood, was available for utiliyt roles at both shortstop and third base. Replacing Christman as a reserve first baseman, he said, is outfielder Sam Mele who had experience with the Red Sox.

Trade talk by the Nats has come to a standstill, said Griffith. "We've had only one trade offer in the last week. That was by the Chicago White Sox and it was so asinine we wouldn't listen."

The White Sox offered Second Baseman Case Michaels and another player for First Baseman Eddie Robinson and Pitcher Ray Scarborough. It was a strain on Clark Griffith's telephone manners.

Charlie Brickley, Harvard All-Time Great, Dies at 58

New York, Dec. 28 (U.P.).—Charlie Brickley, 58, All-American football star at Harvard in 1912 and '13, died tonight of a heart attack in his hotel room.

Henry Garrity, a friend living on the same floor of the hotel, said Brickley had complained about feeling ill shortly before he died. Garrity said he summoned the hotel physician immediately but that Brickley succumbed before the doctor arrived.

Brickley had paid two visits to Roosevelt Hospital recently because of heart trouble, Garrity said.

Tatum Still In Line for Florida Job

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Ponte Verda Beach, Fla., Dec. 28.—Despite coyness by both parties, the University of Florida is still interested in having Jim Tatum as its football coach.

Dr. Hillis Miller, president of the institution, revealed that the Maryland head coach is still very definitely in the picture to succeed Ray (Bear) Wolf, who was fired two months ago.

Speaking from Gainesville, Fla., Dr. Miller said: "I cannot deny that Mr. Tatum is being considered. We are in the process of considering several prospects for the position and Mr. Tatum's is among those. Beyond that, I can add little at this time."

When confronted with Dr. Miller's remarks tonight following Maryland's practice for their Monday Gator Bowl date with Missouri, Tttum replied:

"In we make a good showing January 2 against Missouri and Florida is interested in me, I'll be interested in Florida."

That was pretty much the same statement Tatum made two weeks ago when his name was first linked with the Florida coaching job. The only difference in what he said then and tonight is "if we make a good showing against Missouri."

When asked if his chances of landing the job depend on Maryland's showing against Missouri, Tatum answered. "I wouldn't say that, but gosh, you don't think they'd hire me if my team didn't show up well, do you."

Not Before Gator Game

Dr. Miller said he didn't know when Florida would be ready to announce it's new coach, "but the announcement won't be made until we deem it consistent with good judgment."

Nichols' 27 Points Lead To Leaders' Fourth Loss

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

The Caps last night did what only three other teams in the National Basketball Association have been able to do all season.

They whipped the Syracuse Nationals.

By an 87-85 score the Eastern Division's third-place Caps, losers of their last two outings, turned back the division's leaders at Uline Arena. It was only the fourth loss in 27 games for Syracuse.

But there was nothing flukey about Washington's triumph in the Nationals' only appearance here during the 1949-50 season, attracting 3340 fans. The Caps simply outplayed their high-flying guests, eventually winning because of a brilliant night at the foul line and Jack Nichols.

Caps Convert 25 of 28

Twenty-five of the hosts' points were served up from 15 feet out, on only 28 shots.

At the end, when Syracuse made a desperate bid to go ahead, it was three straight singles by Freddy Scolari, Nichols and Chick Reiser which voided what might have been the game-winning points by the Nationals' Paul Seymour and Coach Al Cervi.

With his important point in the last minute, Nichols brought his production for the evening to a lofty 27 points. He made seven out of seven foul shots. His 10 field goals were all of the spectacular variety as he turned in an excellent all-around game.

Nichols' hotest scoring mate was little Freddy Scolari, who flipped in 18 points. But on the defensive lanky Bones McKinney gave the Caps the biggest boost by holding Adolph Schayes, Syracuse' ace scorer, to 20 points. Meanwhile the invaders were being led by Bill Gabor, a whizz under the basket, who turned in 23 points.

Washington was never behind, although the Nationals managed to deadlock the score seven times.

Their first tie came after only 1:15 of play at 4-4, but after knotting it at 11-11 Syracuse dropped back to trail by four points, 21-17, at the end of the quarter.

The Caps' widest margin in the second period was seven points—and that's what they wound up with, a 38-31 lead at intermission.

But Syracuse bounced back to tie it again at 5:16 of the third quarter on a seven-point streak credited to Alex Hannum, Schayes, Gabor and Johnny Mackinowski. It was 49-49 before Nichols tallied from side court and after that the Caps were tied only once.

Nichols Emerges Again

They had a 63-57 margin going into the final period and this was stretched to 10 points before Schayes and Coach Al Servi put on a spree that knotted matters at 73-all.

Again Nichols was involved in putting Washington in front, but it was Scolari who rammed home the shot that put the Caps in front for good. He made it 79-77 in a running heave, and Nichols and Dick O'Keefe gave him insurance.

The nearest Syracuse could get after that was within two points, at 84-82, with a minute and 18 seconds left.

In a preliminary Naval Air Station turned back the D. C. Cavaliers, 69-64.

His Pressure Is Resented

Sen. Richeson Wants Virginia-W&M Game

Bill Requiring Series Renewal To Be Introduced

Richmond, Va., Dec. 28 (AP).—The State Legislature, which once considered abolishing football in the Old Dominion, will be asked to make it mandatory that the University of Virginia and William and Mary meet each year on the gridiron.

State Senator Frank S. Richeson of Richmond said today he would introduce a bill when the General Assembly meets next month insuring a contest between the two State-supported schools.

Fifty-two years ago the Legislature defeated by a 21-12 margin a bill to outlaw football in the State after injuries to players had stirred up considerable agitation against the sport.

Richeson's bill would require that all State-supported institutions schedule each other in all sports participated in by the schools.

But the lawmaker made it clear his measure was aimed at bringing together Virginia and William and Mary.

Cites N. C. Battle

"I am confident that a game between these two schools would be the game of the year, so far as citizens of Virginia are concerned," said the white-haired Richeson, a real estate dealer.

"There is no reason why there should not be as much rivalry between the schools in Virginia as in North Carolina. For instance, the game between North Carolina and Duke drew a crowd of over 47,000.

"Here in Virginia, we have the two outstanding teams of our State, both of whom have gained national reputations, who do not play each other. As a result, no team is actually the champion of the State. The claims to the championship are often made on paper but not in actual play."

Richeson's proposed bill has precedent on its side. Two years ago, the Alabama Legislature issued an ultimatum to Auburn and the University of Alabama to begin playing each other in football or be cut off from State funds. The two schools resumed relations last year, Alabama winning, 55-0.

1951 May Be First Clash

Richeson's bill, if it passes, would hardly go into effect before 1951 inasmuch as Virginia and William and Mary already have virtually completed their football schedules for 1950.

The suggested get-together received a boost from Coach Rube McCray of William and Mary. From Montgomery, Ala., where he is helping coach the Gray squad for the Blue-Gray game Saturday, McCray said: "I think it would be a fine thing for all State schools to meet in all sports."

Pritchett Says Schools Should Find Solution

By Bus Ham
Post Sports Editor

The University of Virginia is not unalterably opposed to playing William and Mary in football.

But Virginia strongly resents the apparent use of political pressure to bring about a renewal of football relations between these two Old Dominion schools.

Virginia State Senator Frank S. Richeson plans to introduce a bill in the General Assembly next month to require Virginia and William and Mary to meet.

Question "Not Unsolvable"

Norton Pritchett, athletic director at Virginia, said in Charlottesville last night that the question of Virginia playing William and Mary is "not unsolvable."

"It can be resolved, but not by pressure," he said. "This matter should be approached by the two schools on a basis of understanding, mutual regard and consent."

Virginia and William and Mary have not met in football since 1941.

Asked why these teams have not played since the Pearl Harbor year, Pritchett said "that is something for the schools to discuss, and not for public airing."

Eligibility Standards Key

From other sources it was learned that Virginia and William and Mary have not seen eye-to-eye on eligibility standards and scholastic requirements.

These are some of the things Pritchett probably had in mind when he referred to "understanding, mutual regard and consent."

Some of the Charlottesville folk say "there never has been a strong rivalry between the university and William and Mary, from Virginia's viewpoint . . . It has been only in the last decade that William and Mary teams have gained prominence in football."

President Colgate W. Darden of the university and the school paper, the Cavalier, like the idea of a Virginia-William and Mary game.

Open Date Likely in '51

The Cavalier recently suggested that it might be a good idea to look into the possibilities of renewing the series with William and Mary.

After 1950, Virginia may have an open date into which the William and Mary game would fit nicely. Virginia's agreement with Tulane ends after next season.

Senator Richeson tried to bring Virginia and William and Mary together in a post-season game for a polio fund in 1947, but Virginia refused to play.

Last night Richeson said in Richmond that he could "see no reason for these two schools not meeting."

"It should be THE game of the year in Virginia," he said. "They are standout teams, sought all over the country, and it would be a great thing for the State for them to play each other."

all State-supporte dinstitutions

Richeson, a Randolph-Macon man, said that North Carolina and North Carolina State were "having trouble getting together not so long ago but they decided to play when a bill like mine was drawn up."

"They scheduled their game before the bill was introduced and I hope Virginia and William & Mary do the same thing."

The bill that Richeson plans to introduce also would require that all State-supported institutions schedule each other in all sports.

Virginia doesn't like that idea at all.

"We would have little or no room on our football schedule for Penn, Maryland, North Carolina and such schools," persons close to the university said. "We do not want to play too many State teams.

"It's dictatorial when the State attempts to step in and tell us what to do in scheduling games."

Ben Hogan Leaves For Tourney, May Start Comeback

Fort Worth, Tex., Dec. 28 (AP).—Golfer Ben Hogan was on his way to the West Coast today possibly to launch a comeback in big-time golfing.

Hogan plans to attend three tournaments on the PGA's winter tour—the Los Angeles Open, Bing Crosby Invitational and the Phoenix tournament which has been renamed the Ben Hogan Open—before returning to Fort Worth.

"There's a possiblity that I'll play," admitted Hogan, "but right now I can't say. I'll just have to wait and see how I'm feeling and how my game is working. One thing for sure, I'm not going out there and shoot in the eighties!"

Hogan has been playing the Colonial course here regularly for the past 15 days, the first time he's handling golf clubs since his near fatal traffic accident last February

They Call It Wrestling

Baxter Whips Brown in Utter Confusion

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

EMPLOYING A RUSE that was considered corny in the days of the Roman gladiators, Laverne Baxter turned defeat into a heavily-booed victory last night at Turner's Arena. Natie Brown, former Washington heavyweight fighter, was the victim.

Without displaying one hold that faintly resembled wrestling, the two pug-uglies battered each other with their fat fists in a manner that looked mighty like leveling.

Finally Natie lambasted Laverne above and below the belt until the giant villian crumbled to the floor. Brown kept slugging as Referee Milo Steinborn leaned over apparently to count out Baxter.

Somewhere during the count, Baxter reached around and patted Brown on the back. According to the script, Natie believed the referee was proclaiming him the winner.

Brown arose, held his right arm high and was taking a bow when Laverne let loose with a punch that not only lowered Natie's arm but his body as well.

When Natie, for show appearances, seemed to be through, Referee Steinborn raised Baxter's arm—the winner.

Brown, who was in the same right with Joe Louis as a boxer, won three unscheduled bouts after the decision. He floored Baxter, the referee and Irish Jack Kelly, a wrestler who jumped into the ring to congratulate Baxter.

It was all over in 7 minutes, giving the impression that Baxter had an early date.

This Baxter deserves an Oscar. Never in stage history has an actor crammed as much into such a short period of time. He was as dirty as the inside of an incinerator chimney. Were he a race horse, he would have had to be by Murder out of Mayhem.

In the opening minutes, Baxter exhibited a new hold—at least new to me. He rammed his hand so far down Natie's throat it looked as if he were trying to remove the ex-fighter's tonsils or find a button he had swallowed.

Wearying of this, he began kneeing Brown as if the latter was riding on the handlebars of a bicycle. Natie, as miscast in a hero role as I would be as Joan of Arc, then brought into play perhaps the only hold he knows—a left and a right.

Baxter came into the ring wearing a taped spot on his right forehead. Natie, of course, pulled off the bandage—but I saw that act at the Gayety Theater in a match after the burlesque show in 1912 so I won't go into detail.

According to Press Agent Dave Herman, who sat beside me squirming, grunting and rooting, and worked up what appeared to be a tear when Brown lost, Baxter and Natie are now tied, after three matches. Brown won the first by disqualification. The second was declared "no contest"—last night was No. 3.

P. S.—Referee Milo Steinborn, the onetime "German Oak" of wrestling, is now 60 years old. At the real game, he probably could lick them both.

Dear Folks:

Friend Horace Wade writes that there are more than 200 baby horses at Gulfstream Park learning their ABCs and awaiting their January 1 birthday when they become eligible for racing. Grooming a youngster for his running career is nerve-wracking. "Horses are creatures of habit," horsemen say. "They can be taught good habits but they acquire bad ones." Keeping bad habits at a minimum demands patience. He must learn to gallop in a straight line, so he will later run no less true. His quick eyes absorb every new scene. A sheet of paper, a worker in the infield, a clocker on the rail are things to be closely studied by the curious infants. He must become used to rattling hoofs around him, as well as other distractions of racing. Then he must learn about the starting gate. Requires approximately 90 days for a good job. It's been done faster, but if you rush him, he'll make you wait later.

Dave Shapiro, Hero of Basketball 'Fix,' Gets Back to Normalcy and He Likes It

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

IF YOU HAD MET Dave Shapiro on the George Washington campus a year ago, and then saw him again yesterday, you wouldn't recognize him.

A year ago, Dave was haggard and pale and nervous. His classwork and basketball play were on the downgrade. He plainly showed the strain of a 3-months game of cat-and-mouse with four New York gamblers who offered him $1000 to throw the G.W.-Manhattan basketball game.

"Shapiro, the Hero, as the newspapers later dubbed him, looks refreshingly different now. He's pink-cheeked and happy. He took the District of Columbia bar examination last week, and will be ready to graduate from G.W. next month as a full-fledged lawyer.

A year ago, Dave bravely lured the "fixers" into a trap, and New York District Attorney Frank Hogan and his men nabbed them at Madison Square Garden. G. W., led by Dave's 11 points, upset Manhattan, and the 25-year old Brooklyn native was finally able to relax—or so he thought.

REPORTERS from all over the country converged on Dave. Look and Newsweek magazines did articles on him. "We The People" radio program beckoned him and his family. And his marks and basketball play slumped still more.

Finally, four months later, with basketball over, Dave's life returned to normalcy, and he again made good marks in school. His fellow students stopped pointing him out on the campus, and the offers of jobs subsided.

All this is okay with Dave. "I just want to be a good lawyer," he says.

HE HAS A STANDING offer of a job from the New York D.A., but prefers to work in a law office in Washington, for awhile at least.

He still finds time to play basketball although he used up his collegiate eligibility last season. He is a member of the Jewish Community Center team.

Twenty-six years old, he's considered one of the most eligible bachelors on the G.W. campus.

He's visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Shapiro in Brooklyn this week, and next Tuesday, he's going over to Madison Square Garden to see a basketball game. G.W. is playing Manhattan again, and he wants to be there, "just for the memories."

2d-Seeded Richardson Easy Victor

Miami Beach, Fla., Dec. 28 (AP).—Top-seeded Gil Bogley of Washington, D. C., national junior champion, and second-seeded Hamilton Richardson of Baton Rouge, La., advanced with ease into the third round of the third annual Orange Bowl junior tennis championships today.

Bogley defeated Robert Durning of Louisville, Ky., 6-1, 6-1, and Richardson, who went to the national junior finals against Bogley, trounced Bill Islar of Miami Beach, 6-1, 6-3.

Third seeded Ted Jax of Hamtramck, Mich., defeated Frank Spears, of Greenville, S. C., 6-1, 10-8.

Doug Sandberg, Coral Gables, Fla., defeated Bernie Friedman, Miami Beach, 6—0, 6—2.

Alan Fischl, Long Island City, N. Y., won from Robert Sessano, Hollywood, Fla., 6—1, 6—1.

Tim Coss, Washington, D. C., defeated Eugene Mann, Miami Beach, 6—4, 6—2.

Rey Garrido of Havana defeated Harvey Jackson of Washington, Ga., 6—2, 3—6, 6—0, in a boys singles quarter-finals match and Francesco Contreros of Mexico City, defeated Richard Potter of Hamtramck, Mich., 6—4, 4—6, 6—3.

Speed Diet, Says 'Expert'

Tatum Refuses to Feed Terps Ostrich Eggs At Risk of Hurting Babe Zaharias' Feelings

PONTE VEDRA BEACH, FLA., Dec. 28.—If Maryland is outsped by Missouri in next Monday's Gator Bowl game it won't be Jim Casper's fault.

Brother Casper, who lives in nearby St. Augustine Fla., is an ostrich egg expert from way back and if you think ostrich eggs aren't just the thing for a football team you should meet Brother Casper.

He popped into the Maryland camp here today with two ostrich eggs almost as large as basketballs.

Have these scambled and feed them to your squad, the enthusiastic Brother Casper suggested to Coach Jim Tatum who instantly showed he knew nothing about ostrich eggs. "I never heard of anything like that" Tatum muttered. "Why ostrich eggs?"

"Why ostrict eggs?" replied the astonished Brother Casper, they'll add speed to your squad that's why and you're gonna need speed to beat Missouri.

Holding one of the eggs much in the manner of George Mikan palming a basketball, Casper explained his ostrich egg theory to the perplexed Tatum.

"I HAVE 7 of the largest and fastest ostriches living at my farm in St. Augustine. The two eggs I have here were laid by an ostrict hen we call Babe Zaharias for speed showed as sprinter.

"Babe, the ostrict that is, stands over 7 feet tall and weighs nearly 325 pounds. She has been trained to race to a sulky in the infield of our one-eighth mile schooling race track. She's the fastest of th lot by far. Is that proof enough. They'll not only add speed to your players," waxed Brother Casper, getting hotter than a fried egg, "but these ostrich eggs scrambled with furnish about 40 portions of the sweetest eggs this side of heaven. What have you got to lose?"

After due deliberation Tatum accepted the eggs but not for the purpose of feeding them to his football team. He's decided to have the players autograph them as a souvenir.

"Babe Zaharias wouldn't like that," said Brother Casper. "She sure wouldn't."

IN SHORT—The Terps plan to use Missouri pass patterns against the Tigers. They installed four new pass plays, all used by Missouri, in today's two sessions; and, by the end of this afternoon's practice, had perfected them so well that it appeared they had been using them all season. The new maneuvers have Halfbacks Mighty Mo Modzelewski and Bob Shemonski, both sophomores, passing along with Quarterbacks Joe Tucker and Stan Lavine. Assistant Coach Al Woods and Manager Lefty Nairn arrived early this morning with the team's equipment. Fog and three blowouts delayed their arrival from College Park. Today's weather was perfect for football, but not for Florida. The temperature dropped to about 45 degrees, and the chill served as a bracer as the 44-man squad zipped through two workouts Tatum described as "too good." They appear ready now," he said, "and I hope they can hold that sharp edge until Monday." — MORRIS SIEGEL.

Colts Want 2 For 1 in Draft

Baltimore, Dec. 28 (AP).—The president of the Baltimore Colts wants weaker teams in the new National-American Football League to get twice as many chances to draft players as the top teams.

Abraham Watner proposed today that teams which won less than half their 1949 games be given two draft choices to every one by clubs with better than a .500 record.

Watner, recently elected president of the Colts, said he will make the suggestion at the January 19 organization meeting

The 13 members remaining from the two former leagues will convene then to draft players and formally adopt new regulations. In addition to this year's college players eligible for the pro draft, there are 122 players cut loose by the consolidation.

The Colts will have first draft choice since it owns the worst record of the past season—only one victory. The teams are to pick according to their records, from the bottom up.

By Bill Gilbert

THE BASKETBALL PICTURE at George Washington High School this year could very easily be a rosy one.

The reason is Bobby Kessler, a 16-year-old youngster who hails from Pasadena, Calif., home of the Rose Bowl. Bobby, who stands 6 feet 3 inches tall and tips the scales at 170 pounds, is being groomed by his coach, Al (Rasty) Doran, as successor to Jim Gahagan, the best player on last year's squad.

Gahagan was last year's center and sparkplug of the team that won 25 games and lost only 1—that to E. C. Glass of Lynchburg, Va., in the finals for the Virginia State championship.

Kessler played the center position of the Elliott Junior High team last year. This year he could only score two points while the Generals were beating Montgomery Blair, 43-41, but came back to tally 12 points last Friday while Gonzaga was beating G. W., 35-34.

Kessler's specialty is a hook shot and he is also adept at ball handling.

Doran has his two forwards back from last year. Don Hanback, football end, is the team's best man at driving in toward the basket for layups and Erwin Jones is the clutch player. Last year in the Metro tourney, when a couple of boys had fouled out, Jones came off the bench to take up the slack. Jones is 6 feet 4 inches tall and weighs 195 pounds.

The two guards will be Warren (Smiley) Moore and Sonny Spittle.

Pete Wedel and Fordie Thompson are the two best reserves.

Doran considers the team's defeat by Gonzaga a blessing in disguise. He says, "I think the boys were trying too hard to live up to last year's record. Now that they have been beaten once this year, I think the pressure is definitely off. They'll get better as they go along."

N. C. State, Georgia Tech Also Win

Raleigh, N. C., Dec. 28 (AP).—Penn State broke a march of favorites in the opening round of the Dixie Basketball Classic by stopping Duke, 51-48, here tonight.

The win carried the Nittany Lions into the semifinals of the championship bracket opposite West Virginia, which earlier in the night had whipped North Carolina, 58-50.

Paired across the way in the championship finals were North Carolina State, which rode to an 81-64 victory over Rhode Island State on a 33-point scoring show by forward Sammy Ranzino, and Georgia Tech, which defeated a surprisingly tough Wake Forest outfit, 64-57.

The semifinals will open with North Carolina State and Georgia Tech tangling at 3:30 tomorrow afternoon. The Penn State-West Virginia game will be reeled off at 9 o'clock tomorrow night as the windup of the second day of the three-day tournament.

D'Ambrosio, 13, Scores 32 Points In C. Y. O. Tourney

Thirteen-year-old Gene D'Ambrosio set a tournament record by scoring 32 points and leading St. Joseph's to a 48-19 victory over St. Michael's last night. It was a quarter-finals game in the Catholic Youth Organization playoffs at St. John's High.

In other quarter-finals games, Holy Comforter whipped Holy Name, 43-34, St. Dominic's routed Blessed Sacrament, 38-15, and St. Teresa's upset defending champion St. Gabriel's, 34-25. David Shannon turned in a fine game for St. Dominic's by scoring 21 points.

Today's semifinals 2 p. m. at St. John's pit St. Joseph's against Holy Comforter and St. Dominic's against St. Teresa's. Finals take place Friday night 8 o'clock at St. John's.

By putting in 15 field goals and two foul shots last night, D'Ambrosio, a 6-footer, broke the year-old tournament record of 24 points in a game, set by Brother Frye of Holy Comforter.

Daly's 34 Points Pace Merrick In Tourney Win

Joe Daly's 34 points led Merrick Boys' Club to a 74-11 romp over Del Ray in a 105-pound game in the Washington Boys' Club Christmas basketball tournament yesterday at the club gym.

In an 80-pound game, Gene Adams scored 19 points to pace Merrick to a 38-7 victory over Trinidad.

Police Boys' Club No. 10 defeated Eastern Branch, 31-25, in another 105-pound game.

Jim Thorpe Meets Press Today at Touchdown Club

Jim Thorpe, considered by many to be the greatest American athlete of all time, is in Washington where he will be host at a noontime press conference at the Touchdown Club today.

The 63-year-old Indian was accompanied here by his No. 1 fan, the former Patrician Gladys Woodbury of Louisville, whom he married five years ago.

He will be given a scroll and leather case as "America's greatest athlete" at the Touchdown Club banquet January 7 at the Statler Hotel.

Wiping out rumors that he is jobless and ill, Thorpe said yesterday that he has just come East from Hollywood, where he worked on the motion picture based on his life. It's entitled "The All-American," and will be released next year.

Shot by Palmer Wins Hi-Y Clash

Larry Palmer put in a layup in the last few seconds of the game to enable Washington-Lee Beta to defeat Bethesda-Chevy Chase Alpha, 34-33, in the quarter-finals of the Hi-Y Christmas basketball tournament yesterday at the Boys' YMCA.

In another quarter-final game, Maryland Park defeated Suratsville, 58-44, with Bob Amos pacing the winners with 24 points.

Maryland Park plays Eastern at 1 o'clock and Washington-Lee Beta meets Hyattsville at 2 in the semifinals this afternoon at the Boys' YMCA gym. The finals will be played at 4 o'clock.

Powell Upsets Poster, 31-30

A green Powell team upset a favored United States Poster squad, 31-30, last night at Macfarland Junior High School gym in the unlimited unrestricted class of the D. C. Recreation Department Christmas basketball tournament.

Sonny Hartman's desperate half court shot with only 5 seconds left enabled the winners to erase a 30-29 deficit and come out ahead.

Tonight's big game in the unlimited unrestricted class pits Edgewood against Foggy Bottom at 8:30 at the Coolidge High School gym. The teams are two of the strongest entered in the tournament.

105-pound class—Macfarland 38, Takoma 18; Congress Heights 41, Kenilworth 7; Hine 41, Ridge 18; Jefferson 30, Anacostia 28.

Civil Service to List More Than 40 Tests for Jobs in Next 6 Months

JOB NEWS: More than 40 Civil Service examinations will be announced by the central office here during the six-month period beginning January 1.

A tentative list of the examinations follows along with the probable month of announcement, grades to be covered, whether the tests are to be written or applicants graded on education and experience, and how they are to be handled. These tests are scheduled to be announced in January:

Census clerk for grades GS-2 and 3 jobs. The written test will be handled by Census' committee of examiners here under Civil Service direction.

Economist for grades GS-7 through 12. Applicants will be rated by the commission on education and experience.

Photoengraver. Applicants will be rated on experience by the the commission. Appointees to the ungraded jobs will be paid a daily wage.

Auto mechanic for grades CPC-4 through 8. Applicants will be rated on experience.

Operating engineer for grades CPC-4 through 8 and GS-11. Ratings to be made on experience.

Contract officer and loan guarantee technical assistant for grades GS-11 and 12. Ratings on experience by agency examining boards.

Glassblower for grades GS-5 through 9. Ratings on experience.

Transportation and communication specialists for grades GS-5 through 12. Ratings on experience.

In February, these examinations are slated to be announced:

Shorthand reporter, GS 6 through 9 jobs. The examinations will be written.

Communications operating, GS-4 through 12 jobs. Ratings on experience.

Museum aid and exhibits, construction and preparation, for GS-2 through 7 jobs. The test will be written.

Library and archives assistant, GS-1 through 7 jobs. Written test.

Lithographic pressman, bindery worker. Ratings on experience for the ungraded jobs.

Government Printing Office apprentice. A written test for ungraded jobs.

Technologist, GS 7, 9 and 11-15 jobs. Ratings on experience.

Medical Officer, GS 11 to 15 jobs. Ratings on experience.

Tobacco inspector, GS 3 to 9 jobs. A written test to be conducted by a committee of expert examiners.

In March, these tests are due to be announced:

Social workers and public welfare adviser, GS 9 to 13 jobs. A written test will be conducted by a committee. Marketing specialist, GS 7 to 14 jobs. Ratings on experience. General Supply, GS 5 to 12 jobs. Ratings on experience.

These tests are slated to be opened in April:

Electronics laboratory mechanic, GS 2 to 7, and 9 to 11. Ratings on experience. Engineer, GS 9 and 11 and 12 jobs. Ratings on experience. Clinical psychologist, GS 11 to 15 jobs. A committee will rate applicants on experience. Physicist and chemist, GS 9 to 15 jobs. Ratings on experience. Mathematician, GS 7 to 15 jobs. Ratings on experience. Metallurgist, GS 9 to 15 jobs. A committee to rate on experience.

In May, these tests are scheduled to be announced and all of the applicants for them will be rated on experience by Civil Service:

Interior decorator, GS 5 to 12 jobs; actuary, GS 7 to 12; laboratory mechanic, GS 3 to 7; laboratory machinist, GS 3 to 5; Fish and Wildlife biologist, GS 7 to 12 and intern medical officer for ungraded jobs. Only two examinations, both to be rated on experience, are slated for June. They are: Real property and appraising, GS 7 to 12, and land bank appraiser, GS 5 to 12.

When Is a Half-Century Not a Half-Century? Experts Disagree

BOTH sides will now advance on the neutral ground of confusion, calendars and almanacs drawn.

It's the battle of the century and it hasn't been fought, for lo, these 50 years. To wit this decade's version:

Does December 31, 1949, mark the end of the first half of the century?

Of course not, say the Naval Observatory, the Library of Congress (only it wasn't too sure at the start), the Astrophysical Observatory of Smithsonian Institution, and a "representative" of George Washington University's history department.

The second half of the century starts January 1, 1951—not 1950, they claim. Doesn't it stand to reason?

NONSENSE, replies Steward White, a salesman of calendars and member of that school of thought which calls a spade a spade and 50 years a half century. It's December 31, 1949—this New Year's Eve. How else could it be?

At last count, the Archivist of the United States was wavering.

"Look at it this way and you'll understand," said Dr. Edgar W. Woolard, assistant director of the Nautical Almanac of the Naval Observatory. "It comes from the way we mark time.

"We start with the year 1 A. D. There is no year '0.' So the first year ended December 31, 1 A. D. The first century ended 100 years later, or December 31, 100 A. D. The nineteenth century ended December 1, 1900, and the first half of the current century ends 50 years later—or December 31, 1950.

"Now there should have been a year '0,' he admitted. "But there wasn't. Astronomers use the year '0' to aid them in their mathematics, but calendar makers don't."

RIGHT DR. WOOLARD may be about astronomers, but not about dealers in calendars.

White, salesman for the Lewis Calendar Co., 1023 20th st. nw., had this to say:

"What's half a century? Fifty years, right? Very well, haven't we used up 50 years of the twentieth century as of December 31, 1949. Then we start the second half of the twentieth century.

"It's very clear. Just ask the Naval Observatory what century we're in."

The Archivist of the United States, Wayne C. Grover, was inclined to follow White. Then he heard about the Library of Congress.

THE LIBRARY, at first glance, was of the December 31, 1949, opinion. Then they checked.

"Webster's International Dictionary is the authority," an aide in the reference department, Mrs. Beth Blatnik, said. "It says a century is 'A. D. 1 to 100 inclusive' or '1800 to 1900 inclusive'." She stressed "inclusive."

Can't argue about the lack of a year "0," according to L. B. Aldrich of the Smithsonian Observatory. Just no way around it.

"Can't forget about anything," he declared.

"I've talked it over with my husband, who's out of town, and it's December 31, 1950," said Mrs. Gray, wife of the executive officer of the GWU history department.

"Count to 10," she advised. "You don't get to 10 until you've reached it. That's the way it is, really. I think the trouble we're in is that we try to figure it as if it were a baby's birthday: When he's a month old, he's in his first year."

MUSTY newspaper files indicate that the problem was rampant in the waning days of 1899. What century would December 31, 1899 bring? Which bring's up White's question about the century we're in, and Dr. Woolard's answer:

"But don't you see, there wasn't a twentieth century until January 1, 1901. We call Century Zero the first century.

"We won't be in the twenty-first century until January 1, 2001."

The Washington Post

CARRIED TO HOSPITAL—Men of Fire Rescue Squad 1 prepare to place a young girl (center) in an ambulance for transportation to Emergency Hospital yesterday. The child was one of four students of the Blessed Sacrament School in Chevy Chase who were injured in an auto collision at New Hampshire ave. and R sts. nw. They were being driven from a play, "Cinderella"

A Silver Spring man died in Washington Sanitarium, Takoma Park, at 2:40 p. m. yesterday from injuries suffered Tuesday night when his motorcycle collided head on with an auto.

The victim, Bennie E. Janak, 28, of 11817 Goodloe rd., was cycling to work at the National Airport, where he was employed as a mail clerk, when his cycle smashed head on with a car driven by Thomas E. Copeland, 41, of 7737 Arlington ave., Bethesda.

The crash occurred at Georgia ave. and Seminary rd., Silver Spring.

Janak suffered head injuries, internal injuries and fractures of both legs. He never regained consciousness, hospital authorities said.

Charges of reckless driving originally lodged against Copeland, yesterday were changed to manslaughter by Silver Spring police. He was released on personal bond for a preliminary hearing January 3 in Silver Spring Police Court.

Janak leaves his wife, Ruth. He was a native of Texas. Before moving to the Maryland community he resided in southeast Washington.

Mary Carbonaro, 17, of 318 15th st. ne., was injured about 5 p. m. when the bicycle on which she was riding, propelled by her brother James, 12, struck the side of an automobile at 15th st. and Benning rd. ne., police reported.

Miss Carbonaro was admitted to Casualty Hospital for treatment of a possible fracture of the left hip. Her brother was not injured.

The car was driven by Alf C. Haynes, 44, of Mitchellville, Md., a Government Printing Office employe. No charges were placed against him.

In another traffic accident, four Washington youngsters were injured slightly yesterday and a fifth escaped injury.

Those injured were Polly Price, 9, of 5340 42d st nw., bump on forehead; her sister, Penny Price, 5, bruised forehead; John A. Hollowell, 10, of 1868 Columbia rd. nw., bruised forehead, and Billy Marsh, 10, of the Westchester Apartments, leg injury. All were treated at Emergency Hospital and discharged.

The fifth child, Peter Price, 8, of the 42d st. nw. address, was uninjured.

The children were being driven from the Virginia Theater, Alexandria, where they had seen a play, "Cinderella," when the accident occurred.

They were passengers in an auto driven by Mrs. Etta Marsh, mother of Billy and wife of Major S. W. Marsh.

The Marsh car, traveling west on R st. nw., collided with an auto driven by John J. Betton, 70, of 14 16th st. se., which was going north on New Hampshire ave. nw.

Washingtonian Released After Fatal N. J. Crash

Arthur Clement Butler, 45, national director of the Highway Users Conference, with offices in the National Press Building, was involved in an automobile accident in which an elderly woman was fatally injured, the Associated Press reported from Mount Holly, N. J., last night.

Butler, who lives on Albemarle st., Westmoreland Hills, Md., was released on his own recognizance pending a hearing before the Burlington County prosecutor, Harold T. Parker, it was reported.

The woman, Mrs. Anna Bella Patrick, 76, of Warren, Mass., was struck by a car driven by Butler as she returned to her parked car on Route 25 near Burlington, the report said. She died later at Burlington County Hospital.

Alexander Asks Sesqui To Hear Him

Wires Committee Group for Chance To Answer Charges; Chairman Receptive

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

Paul Alexander probably will appear before the Sesquicentennial Commission's executive committee Friday afternoon to answer what he calls "untrue and libelous statements attributed to me."

The founder and now a minority stockholder of the National Capital Sesquicentennial Leasing Bureau, Inc., yesterday, telegraphed the commission asking to appear before it.

McGarraghy In Favor

His request was promptly accepted by Joseph C. McGarraghy, chairman of the executive group. The meeting is scheduled for 2:30 p. m. in the boardroom of the Riggs National Bank.

Alexander has been accused by a Maryland contractor of offering—for a 10 percent kickback—some of the Sesqui construction work, but he has contended he was referring to buildings outside the Freedom Fair.

Selling Exhibit Space

The leasing bureau is now selling some 12 million dollars worth of space to fair exhibitors for which it will receive a 5 percent fee, less expenses. The leasing bureau has a letter of intent from the Sesqui, but has yet to negotiate a formal contract.

This is the text of Alexander's telegram, as received by Robert Fowler, press chief for the Sesqui:

"Request to appear before your commission to stop the untrue and libelous statements attributed to me. In its entirety the whole subject is the greatest fallacy I've ever seen concocted."

Told of the telegram, McGarraghy said:

"Certainly we'd like to hear him. I think we ought to have him there. After all, all we want is the facts."

McGarraghy said the meeting will be a closed session of the five-member group.

The executive committee also is expected to consider proposals that the Sesqui henceforth be operated in a "fish-bowl" atmosphere, with full disclosure of all contracts, agreements and salaries.

Hearing Is Set Jan. 6 on Snow Parking Ban

A public hearing on the controversial snow parking ban has been set by the District Commissioners for January 6.

The hearing is to be held at 10 a. m. in the District Building board room. Letters have been sent to business and civic organizations, asking that they notify Acting Board Secretary G. A. Turner by next Wednesday if they wish to testify.

Escape Costs Two Prisoners One Year Each

Two of four men who hacksawed their way to brief freedom out of Fairfax County jail early last Friday learned yesterday, in Trial Justice Court the penalty they must pay.

Sentenced to one year each were Robert B. Mosley, 19, of 2133 N. Pollard st., Arlington, and Max N. Cecil, 30, Durham, N. C. Since both are awaiting trial on housebreaking charges, the escape constituted for them a misdemeanor.

Held for action of the grand jury were the other escapees—Charles A. Riddle, jr., 20, 1871 Newton st. nw., and James H. Sebastian, 24, 1547 Fairmont st. nw.

Already sentenced to eight years each for armed robbery, and waiting transfer to the penitentiary when they broke out, their escape was a felony and subject to the review of a grand jury.

Commonwealth's Attorney Hugh B. Marsh put William Lowe, Fairfax County resident jailer, on the stand to outline the escape before Judge Harry L. Carrico. The four men pleaded guilty and declined counsel.

The men sawed their way out about 3 a. m. last Friday

Arlingtonian Is Jailed in Numbers Case

A 28-year-old Arlington man, who pleaded guilty Tuesday to "picking up" numbers slips, was sentenced to 30 days in jail plus a $100 fine yesterday by Arlington County Court Judge Hugh Reid.

Defendant in the numbers case was Booker T. Henderson, of 3446 S. 22d st., Arlington, arrested in a raid November 16 by Detective Russell Runyon and State Alcoholic Beveral Control Inspector M. K. Bryant.

At the same time it was disclosed that charges of operating a lottery have been nolle-prossed against William Henry Jones, 50, arrested in the same raid at Jones' room at 1724 S. Edgewood st., Arlington.

Commonwealth's Attorney Denman T. Rucker said the case was dropped because of "the insufficiency of the evidence" against Jones, a headwaiter at the Army-Navy Country Club. A quantity of numbers slips and money were found in Jones' possession, according to Runyon.

Montgomery, Prince Georges Allotted Funds

The State of Maryland yesterday allocated $900,000 to Montgomery County and $356,483 to Prince Georges County in emergency money for school construction.

The State also dipped into its cash surplus to give Baltimore County a $1,190,922 advance for the same purpose, the Associated Press reported.

The funds are advanced on money coming from a 50-million-dollar school bond bill passed by the 1949 Legislature, that had to be reenacted at a special Legislature session December 17 because of a clerical error in recording the bill.

Bids on the bonds will not be opened until January 9, and it will be another 45 days before there would be any funds available from them. Because of the three counties' immediate need for funds the State treasury agreed to the advances, to be repaid from the bonds.

The State may advance up to 4 million dollars of the 50 million dollars.

State School Superintendent Thomas G. Pullen, jr., said recently he did not think any of the Counties other than Montgomery, Prince Georges and Baltimore would need advances.

Montgomery County has asked for $1,330,125 from the school bond issue toward its $5,040,000 1949-50 building program.

Prince Georges expects to ask about $6,200,000 to finance the major portion of an eight-million-dollar building program.

Law Crimps New Year's Eve Revelry

But Midnight Ban On Liquor Doesn't Curb Hotel Plans For Gay Evening

New Year's Eve merrymakers will find plenty to drink at Washington hotels and night clubs before midnight Saturday, but afterward—due to District regulations—their thirst may be assuaged only at private clubs, at home, or by journeying to Baltimore, where drinks flow through New Year's Day.

As one hotelman said:

"It looks as if the country clubs and after-hours clubs will get the business this year."

In the hotels that have arranged special celebrations, prices will be virtually the same as last year and, in isolated cases lower.

Roster of Festivities

It will be business as usual at the Mayflower lounge with a $2 cover charge and the regular Saturday night entertainment featuring dance music.

The Roger Smith lounge will maintain regular prices for drinks, with no special entertainment, although noisemakers and hats will be distributed.

The Pall Mall Room at the Raleigh will show one of a series of old-time melodramas. Admission will be $2 per person, with drinks and food extra.

The Congo Room at the Carlton will charge $5 per cover. The price will include noisemakers and dancing.

"No Mad Rush," Report

"There is no mad rush," for reservations, the Carlton reported, but the management expects the room to be filled to capacity with "regular" patrons.

The Hotel 2400 will ask $6.10 a person including tax and will offer in return, breakfast at 1 a. m. New Year's day, dancing, favors and entertainment.

The Shoreham reported three fourths of Blue Room reservations already gone at $12.20 a person. The price includes dinner, dancing, entertainment and noisemakers.

The Palladium Room at the same hotel will charge $3 a cover and will serve the regular dinners at $2.50 to $3.75, with dancing as an attraction.

At Other Spots

The Embassy Room at the Statler will offer dancing "as usual," with a $2.50 cover, as compared with $4 last year. "Regular" entertainment will be presented.

The Rainbow Room at the Hamilton will charge $4 a person, the price including noisemakers and dancing from 9 p. m. to 1 a. m.

The Copacabana, for $2.50 apiece, offers dancing, favors, and a breakfast at 1 a. m.

Judge Hits U. S. Commissioner Office Here as 'Wasteful'

Judge Armond W. Scott of Municipal Court yesterday denounced the United States commissioner's office here as a "wasteful expense" and an inconvenience to the public.

The commissioner, Cyril S. Lawrence, declined to argue with his fellow magistrate but denied the charge in every detail.

The Municipal Court jurist became piqued when a bail bondsman reported that a defendant, Noble Butler, 38, of 1426 North Capitol st., was at the moment appearing before Lawrence on a numbers lottery charge and could not, at the same moment, be before Scott on a bad-check charge.

Judge Scott then began his blast, saying:

"As a District taxpayer, I can't see why we have to maintain the expense of a system which is not necessary. It is a wasteful expense.

"We have an adequate number of judges and clerks to dispose of all these cases. At any rate, I don't see why the judges in this court must be kept waiting because a defendant is before the commissioner for a hearing. I take the position that the Municipal Court takes precedence and the public must feel so, also.

"The United States commissioner's post was established in the early days of this country because Federal circuit judges had large territories to cover. That is no longer true."

He continued the Butler check case a week in his court. In the meantime, Lawrence held Butler under $1500 bond for setting up a gaming table and possession of number slips.

When informed of the Scott charge, at first Lawrence said, "I don't want to get into a controversy with Judge Scott. I refer him to my boss, Chief Judge Bolitha J. Laws of District Court, or to Congress under whose laws I am empowered to act."

He said his office was far cheaper to maintain than the Municipal Court, case for case. In support of this, he said that he gets a top of $9300 yearly which must pay for his salary and for that of his clerical force. Each judge in Municipal Court, he said, gets $13,000 a year and clerks and stenographers besides.

As for the inconvenience charge, he said that his office is often called on to hold hearings or issue warrants at "odd" hours and dates when judges do not sit in Municipal Court. He said that proceedings in his office, now in the Municipal Center Building, are "quick and efficient."

James O'Shea Dies at 71; Noted Criminal Lawyer

James O'Shea, 71, one of the District's leading criminal attorneys for more than four decades, died early yesterday in Georgetown University Hospital.

The white-haired veteran of the criminal courts—the "Mr. Courthouse" of Washington—had defended hundreds of murderers during his career. He played a prominent role in many celebrated cases during the past 25 years.

More recently he had served as defense counsel for Lawrence Goodall, 24, now awaiting execution for the holdup slaying of Nathanial Johnson, druggist.

He won a court victory last February when he obtained a directed verdict of acquittal for Max Zipkin, 53, who was tried on morals charges involving a 13-year-old girl.

The late Col. Edward J. Kelly, superintendent of police, had reason to be thankful to Mr. O'Shea.

On September 14, 1929, Mrs. Virginia McPherson was found dead in her Washington apartment with a pajama cord tightly knotted about her throat.

Kelly, then head of the homicide squad, believed it was a suicide and a coroner's jury returned a verdict of suicide.

There followed a grand jury investigation. The grand jury charged that Kelly and the late Inspector William S. Shelby had "bungled" the case.

Mr. O'Shea defended Kelly before a special board appointed by the Commissioners. The board not only vindicated Kelly and Shelby but commended them highly for their handling of the case.

Mr. O'Shea was one of the many attorneys who defended Ziang Sun Wan, young Chinese student who in 1919 was charged with a triple slaying.

Wan was accused of murdering three members of the Chinese education mission in a home on Kalorama rd. nw. He was arrested, tried, convicted and sentenced to death.

However, it was brought out that police had held Wan incommunicado for eight days in a hotel room before charging him with murder. The Supreme Court ruled that this constituted mental duress and held that Wan's confession to police was not admissible as evidence.

Wan was twice more tried and each time the jury failed to reach agreement. Seven years after his arrest, in June, 1926, the charges were nolle prossed and Wan was freed.

The case of Wan and that of Edgar R. Perrygo were cited by the Wickersham Commission report in August, 1931, which attacked police brutally.

JAMES A. O'SHEA
Mourned in Judiciary Square

Mr. O'Shea defended the 17-year-old Perrygo in 1920 when he was tried for the bludgeon murder and robbery of Mrs. Emily Faithful, aged Anacostia recluse.

Perrygo was convicted and sentenced to die. Mr. O'Shea appealed and won the youth a new trial. This time, on his attorney's advice, Perrygo pleaded guilty to second degree murder and was sentenced to serve 20 years.

Mr. O'Shea was a native of New York. He was 10 when his family moved to Washington. He attended Georgetown Prep, then went on to Georgetown University where he received his A.B., Ph.D., and doctor of law degrees.

He was honored as a jubilarian—50 years out of college—by his alma mater last June.

For the past 25 years, Mr. O'Shea had been a law associate of Alfred Goldstein with offices at 400 6th st. nw.

Mr. O'Shea had been a member of the District Bar Association for 45 years. He also was a member of the Board of Trade, Knights of Columbus, Holy Name Society and the Elks. He lived at 1613 Madison st. nw.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Carolyn O'Keefe O'Shea, and a brother, Michael O'Shea of Chicago.

Charles Reher Dies; District Watchmaker

Charles A. Reher, 72, a District watchmaker for 20 years, died unexpectedly yesterday at the home of a son, Dr. Charles A. Reher, in Clinton, Pa.

Mr. Reher, who conducted his business at 822 11th st. nw., had been visiting with his son in Clinton since last July.

He was born in Illinois but for a number of years worked in Pittsburgh, Pa., as a watchmaker before coming to the District.

Besides Dr. Reher, Mr. Reher leaves two other sons, Dr. William M. Reher, a chiropodist of 817 14th st. nw., and Paul T. Reher of Pittsburgh, Pa.; five sisters and three brothers.

The funeral has tentatively been set for Clinton, Pa.

Maj. Gen. John Lucas

Services were held at Arlington National Cemetery yesterday for Maj. Gen. John Porter Lucas, 59, native of Kearneysville, W. Va., who died December 24

He was a son of the late Dr. Charles Thomas Craighill, and Frances Thomas Craighill of Charles Town, W. Va. He received his early education in the rural schools near Leetown, Jefferson County; at Shepherd College at Shepherdstown, W. Va., and at West Point from which he was graduated in 1911. Following graduation he married Miss Sidney Wynkoop of Charles Town.

Surviving in addition to his mother and wife are two children, Capt. John Porter Lucas, jr., Camp Hood, Tex., and Mrs. Mary Brooke Boles, wife of Lieut. Col. John Keith Boles, Fort Leavenworth, Kans. He also leaves a brother and sister—Charles C. Lucas, Rose Valley, Pa., and Miss Mary Lucas, Charles Town.

Moncure Rites Today

Funeral services for Robinson Moncure, 68, onetime judge of Alexandria Corporation Court, will be held at 11 a. m. today from Christ Church, Alexandria. Burial will be in Ivy Hill Cemetery.

Miss Kathryn Holmes Bows in Paris Gown

By Marie McNair

KATHRYN HOLMES, Mrs. George Holmes' pretty daughter, smiled her way through her debut party yesterday afternoon, in a setting of flowers sent to her on this festive day.

For her tea at the 1925 F Street Club, the debutante wore a pale maize gown of exquisite tulle and lace made by Germaine Lecomte of Paris and fashioned with a bouffant skirt and a stole about her shoulders. She carried a butterfly bouquet—the design carried out in pale pink carnation petals—which Mrs. Kathryn Churchill of New York had made. Mrs. Holmes wore gold lame with high neck and a draped skirt. Mrs. Fred Vinson, wife of the Chief Justice, was among those asked to take her turn at the buffet table. Mme. Bonnet, wife of the French Ambassador, was also among those assisting, leaving promptly for two other parties before returning home to dress for dinner.

Others at the tea and coffee services were Mrs. John W. Snyder and Mrs. Conger Pratt, the latter, in emerald green satin, staying for dinner in honor of Gen. and Mrs. Omar Bradley's thirty-third wedding anniversary at which Mrs. Holmes was hostess later. Also serving at the tea were Mrs. Clark Clifford, Mrs. Omar Bradley, Mrs. J. Lawton Collins, Mrs. Wade Haislip, Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley, Mrs. Charles F. Brannan, Mrs. Howard McGrath, Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, Lady Lewis, Mrs. Gilbert Hitchcock, Mrs. Parker West and Mrs. Thomas Blake, 3d.

MRS. HOPE ASPELL of Philadelphia, long a close friend of the hostess, was one of the handsomest women in the room, with gray upswept hair, and a trailing gown of black satin with lace over her white shoulders.

Then, at the tea table too, were Mrs. Holmes'daughter, Mrs. Robert C. Bassett of Chicago (she was "Punka" Holmes), Lady Lewis, Miss Adrienne McCardle, Mrs. Pearsons Rust, Mrs. George H. Shaw of New York; Mrs. Curtis Shears, Mrs. A. O. Stanley, Mrs. Edwin Watson, Mrs. Lyle Wilson.

With Sidney and his orchestra playing an obligato to tea-time conversations, I saw in various groups the Ecuadorian Ambassador and Senora de Dillon, Mrs. Edward H. Foley and Mrs. William A. Morgan, Mrs. Alexander Surles, introducing Cadet W. D. Crittenberger; Mrs. Carl Spaatz and her daughter Carla; debutantes Elizabeth Boysen and Hope Hurley surrounded by beaux; and dark haired Doris O'Donnell in red taffeta; Betsy Lewis, Gen. and Mrs. Virgil Petersen, Adm. and Mrs. Clarke Woodward, Mrs. English Gordon, Fred Roy, and Deputy Secretary of Defense, Stephen Early, uncle of the debutante.

THE Mexican Ambassador and Senora de la Colina were hosts at dinner last evening at the embassy in honor of the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Edward G. Miller, jr.

Other guests were the Ambassador of Nicaragua, Dr. Guillermo Sevilla-Sacasa; the Ambassador of Ecuador and Senora de Dillon, the Honduran Ambassador and Senora de Valle, Dr. Luis Quintanilla, Mexican Ambassador to the Organization of American States and Chairman of the Council of the organization; the Secretary General of the OAS and Senora de Lleras, Dr. Joaquin Meyer, Minister Counselor of the Cuban Embassy, and Senora de Meyer, Senora Amalia Castillo Ledon, chairman of the Inter-American Commission of Women; Deputy Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Willard F. Barber, Mrs. Lucille Robertson Marshall, Rafael Nieto, Counselor of the Mexican Embassy, and his mother, Senora Esther Castillo de Nieto.

MISS ELIZABETH HENRY, a debutante last winter, was honored yesterday at a luncheon given by Mrs. John Christian Holmes at her apartment on R st.

Among the guests were Mrs. Robert Selph Henry, mother of the honor guest; Misses Sue Walker, Helen Walker, Judy Snowden, Anne Mearns, Mary Spainhour, Gwendolyn Fairlamb, Eleanor Bishop, Pearce Butler, Caro Butler and Mrs. William Francis Smith.

CAPT. CHARLES HAMILTON MADDOX, USN, and Mrs. Maddox entertained after the National Symphony Orchestra concert last evening for Earl Wild, soloist at the symphony, and Howard Mitchell, conductor, and Mrs. Mitchell. Invited to meet the honor guests were subscribers to the National Symphony and members of the board of directors.

CAPT. RICHARD H. PHILLIPS, USN, and Mrs. Phillips entertained at a supper party last night for Mrs. Phillips' daughter, Miss Suzanne Johnson, a student at Mount Vernon Seminary.

Also honor guests at the supper party were Ensign and Mrs. Valentine Schaeffer who are here from Pensacola, Fla., to visit Mrs. Schaeffer's parents, Capt. John B. Pearson, USN, and Mrs. Pearson. Mrs. Schaeffer, the former Miss Beverly Pearson, was married in Norfolk, Va., last spring.

The 40 young people went later to the Midshipmen and Cadets Ball at the Army-Navy Country Club.

Alice King Estill Weds Marine Maj. F. M. Johnson

MISS ALICE KING ESTILL, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Gentry Estill of Estill, Mo., and Maj. Floyd Myron Johnson, jr., USMC, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Johnson of Albany, Tex., were married yesterday in St. Margaret's Church, Washington. The 4:30 p. m. ceremony was performed by the Rev. Malcolm Marshall and Mr. Estill gave his daughter in marriage.

The bride's gown was of hand-loomed gardenia-white French brocade designed as a robe de style with tucked bodice and skirt made with a tucked yoke. A braided silver girdle encircled her waist and her double veil of French illusion was held by a Juliet cap of seed pearls. She carried a prayer book covered with brocade matching her dress and a spray of white orchids.

Mrs. Porter Fearey was her sister's matron of honor and Mary Fearey, 3-year-old niece of the bride, was flower girl. Other attendants were Miss Frances Leigh Williams of Richmond, Va.; Miss Jean Begeman, Miss Katherine Blake and Mrs. Joseph D. Patch, jr., all of Washington.

After a wedding trip to White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Major Johnson and his bride will live at Quantico, Va., where the bridegroom is on the staff of the Marine Corps Schools.

The bride is the great-granddaughter of the late Capt. Richard King, founder of the famous King Ranch in Texas. Her grandparents were Mr. and Mrs. Richard King of Corpus Christie, Tex., and the late Mr. and Mrs. William Estill of Glen Eden Place, Estill, Md.

She is a graduate of the University of Missouri School of Journalism.

Major Johnson is a grandson of Mrs. Louis Hanitch and the late Mr. Hanitch of Minneapolis, Minn., and of the late Mr. and Mrs. George W. Johnson of Mansfield, Pa. He is a graduate of Rice Institute, Texas.

MRS. JOHN ROSS CASWELL
. . . married at Christ Church

CHRIST CHURCH in Georgetown was the scene of the wedding yesterday afternoon of Miss Carol Fontaine Bradley to John Ross Caswell. The Rev. Albert H. Lucas, Archdeacon of Maryland, and the Rev. John Anschutz performed the ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hoffat Bradley of this city, and the bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell, also of Washington.

Mr. Bradley gave his daughter in marriage. With her white satin gown she wore a rose point lace veil that had belonged to her mother and grandmother. She carried an ivory bound prayer book with white orchids. A diamond and ruby brooch, given to her by the bridegroom, completed her costume.

Miss Martha Jean Walker of Taunton, Mass., was maid of honor, and the bridesmaids included Miss Frances Sternhagen, Miss Alison Bean, Miss Elizabeth de Sibour, Miss Sophie Finkenstadt, Mrs. J. Conway Hunt, the bridegroom's sister; Mrs. Willmott Lewis, jr., Mrs. Harper Sibley, jr., of Rochester, N. Y.; Miss Merriam Mead of Dayton, Ohio, and Miss Shirley Smith of New York.

Serving as best man was Willmott Lewis, jr., an dthe ushers were Bayard and Richard Storey of Hamilton, Mass.; Fulton and Richard Sears of Boston, Mass.; C. Oliver Iselin of Middleburg, Va.; Stephen Halsey of Rumson, N. J.; Lieut. Comdr. J. Conway Hunt of Washington; Thomas and Frederick Bradley, the bride's brothers; William Rollow and Ashbel Green.

A reception followed the ceremony at the Chevy Chase Club. The newlyweds will make their home in Cambridge, Mass., where Mr. Caswell is a student at Harvard College. A veteran of three years' service in the Navy, he was graduated from St. Mark's School, Southboro, Mass.

Miss Miner was graduated from the New Paltz High School and attends Bard College at Annadale-on-Hudson, N. Y. Mr. LeFevre is an alumnus of the Lawrenceville School and the University of Pennsylvania, where he was a member of Psi Epsilon fraternity.

Dinner Party at Army, Navy Club Honors Deb

MISS TOMAJEAN Akers, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd D. Akers, was the guest in whose honor Col. and Mrs. Jack Finks entertained last evening at a dinner party at the Army and Navy Country Club.

Out-of-town guests were Miss Virginia Wise of Butler, Pa., and her brother, Vernon Wise; Miss Anne Newman of Toronto, Miss Elisabeth Field of Austin, Tex.; Miss Betty Baxter of Philadelphia; Midshipman John Reagan of Texarkana, Tex., and others.

Admiral's Son Married in Connecticut

MISS PRISCILLA MASTEN became the bride of Ensign Harry Thurber, jr., USN, yesterday at the First Congregational Church of Madison, Conn.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. William S. Masten and the late Mr. Masten of Madison, and the bridegroom is the son of Rear Admiral and Mrs. H. R. Thurber of Washington.

The Rev. Franklin Bower performed the ceremony and Paul S. Hardy of Pittsburgh, Pa., gave the bride in marriage.

Miss Carol W. Hardy of Pittsburgh was maid of honor, and the bridesmaids included Mrs. Gardner Abbott of Cleveland, Ohio, and Mrs. Elmon Miller of Madison, the bride's sisters; Mrs. Richard Donovan and Miss Emma Thurber of this city, the bridegroom's sisters, and Miss Suzanne Edwards of Chicago, Ill.; Miss Elise Kullman of New York City and Miss Virginia Findlay of Madison.

Richard Thurber was his brother's best man. The ushers were Richard Donovan, Marshall Diggs, both of Washington; Ensign Donald Lister of Lafrence, Long Island, N. Y.; Ensign Philip Thom of Little Rock, Ark., and Lieut. Jeffrey C. Metzel of this city.

Following their honeymoon at Sea Island, Ga., the newlyweds will live in Pensacola where Ensign Thurber is stationed.

Mrs. Thurber is a graduate of the National Cathedral School and Sweet Briar College. The bridegroom attended Sullivan's School before entering the United States Naval Academy. He was graduated from the academy with the class of 1949.

ANOTHER marriage of interest to Washington's service society took place yesterday afternoon at the Navy Communications Chapel when Miss Charlotte Shilling and Emile Joseph Simonel, jr., were wed.

The bride is the daughter of Capt. and Mrs. C. W. Shilling, Navy Medical Corps, of Arlington, Va., and Mr. Simonel is the son of Mrs. Margaret Simonel of Detroit, Mich.

Admiral S. W. Salisbury, Chief of Navy Chaplains, performed the ceremony. The bride, gowned in white satin, carried white roses centered with an orchid. Miss Ruth E. Henry of East Orange, N. J., was maid of honor, and Miss Polly Williams and Miss Grace Teed of Ann Arbor, Mich., were bridesmaids. The best man was Clyde Weber of Detroit and the ushers included Charles Shilling, the bride's brother; Donald Wynes of Detroit and Clinton McGrew, jr., of Arlington.

Following the reception at the Shilling home, the newlyweds left for a wedding trip to Detroit, Mich. They will reside at Oberlin, Ohio, where both attend the Oberlin Conservatory of Music. The bride was graduated from the Norwich Free Academy, Norwich, Conn. Her husband is a veteran of three years' service in the Army.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Man and Wife Dispute About Child Training Methods; He Frowns on Drying Son's Tears After Falls; Mother Sees Value in Sympathy

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Tom and I have a little son—I'll call him Tommy—who is nearly three years of age and very sweet. He is a quiet, affectionate child and completely unspoiled—that is the unanimous opinion of all our relatives, neighbors, guests, etc.

But lately something has come up in Tommy's training, about which his father and I have had a private tiff. It is a matter which seems very important to me and I will be grateful for your unbiased opinion.

This is it: When Tommy hurts himself, through a bad fall, etc., he cries and comes to me for a little sympathetic cuddling. When his daddy isn't home he gets it, and within a few minutes (after I divert his attention, speak softly, etc.) the hurt is forgotten.

Wife's Defense of Compassion

THIS REACTION of mine is partly instinctive and also partly based to the firm conviction that "sympathy begets sympathy,"—for how can I expect Tommy some day to feel tender concern or sympathy toward other peoples' distress if he has received none for his own?

My husband disagrees. He maintains that Tommy should learn to take his pain "like a man," not cry and be pampered. Therefore if Tommy is hurt in his presence he refuses to let me near him except to administer first-aid, and Tommy remains upset for some time.

Now Tommy isn't a sissy. He climbs fences, does all normal small-boy things and gets up smiling after minor falls and bumps. I, too, want him to be manly; but feel it is an added blessing when a man is also tender, and I maintain that my so-called cuddling is one way of achieving that. Am I wrong? Or if not, how can I convince my husband? Please advise us. P. K.

Wife Talks Well, but Acts Unwisely

DEAR P. K.: People are becoming more aware of the indisputable truth that the individual's emotional competence—meaning his capacity to experience and convey love, tenderness, concern and sympathy—is largely developed or blighted in his earliest relationships, depending upon the kind of treatment, warmhearted or cold, he gets in infancy and childhood from his parents, and paraticularly his mother.

However, it seems to me you are invoking sound theory to justify unsound practice in this instance. I believe your so-called firm conviction that sympathy begets sympathy is a second-thought rationalization of prolonged babying of your son, and that this performance, which the psychiatrists call being "overprotective," has come about because the exchange is pleasurable to you.

I belive it is indicative of intensely possessive mother-love, an incipient "momism" that embodies great unconscious reluctance to have your first-born son grow up, emotionally emancipated from physical dependency upon mother comfort, and thus able to love another woman—wife or sweetheart—wholeheartedly at some future time.

IN SHORT, though you say your sentimental soothing of Tommy's bruises is partly instinctive and partly aimed to invest him with tender concern for others' distress, I rather think it is an emotional transaction altogether, a matter of playing up a very interpersonal attachment on a fixed level of primitive feeling, and then trying to defend it against your husband's anxious objections. Not that you do this consciously, of course; but that's the pitch as I see it; and simply to be aware of it is to begin to bring reason to bear in wisely modifying the self indulgent course.

You speak as if Tommy, scarcely three, were often in pain due to bad falls; and if such is the case, either he is being shortchanged of intelligent preventive care, or he is inventing falls (courting injuries) to qualify for the cuddling you've encouraged him to expect after hurting himself. Your references to cuddling when his daddy isn't home, and his upset clamor for more of the same when his dad is present to thwart it, points to a "conditioned" demand for babying that seems inconsistent with his age.

For advce: If your husband isn't the tender type, don't prey upon your son's felings for compensation. In doing your best to be a good mother, bear in mind that the finest devotion, the most generous love, is that which promotes growth of self reliance and self possession of soul in the beloved. In a sense, that's what your husband is talking about; so beware of enslaving your son to yourself.

The Family Scrapbook

By Dr. Ernest O. Osborne

"Children should be seen but not heard" is a mixim of yesteryear to which, supposedly, we don't pay too much attention today. Most of us don't believe that the child should be "squelched." Theoretically at least, we think he should be permitted to take part in conversations that go on in the family. Naturally, we won't let him dominate the conversation, but we do want him in it.

Actually, however, even though we usually don't demand that children be completely quiet when their elders are talking, we often pay little attention to what they are saying. We may say "Yes, dear," without really hearing, or suggest pleasantly that it's so nice outdoors that they shouldn't be missing the chance to play in the good fresh air.

Many of us adults don't know how to talk to children. We are either rather condescending and talk down to them—witness, "What a fine little man you are getting to be," or we use a vocabulary that is above their heads.

A little attention to what youngsters are interested in talking about and a little effort to gear into these interests will be much appreciated by the younger generation.

CLASSIC simplicity of line is the dominant note in this sun dress and jacket inspired by the coat worn by the shepherds in Greece for the past 400 years. Made of pin-check cotton, the jacket is tucked, the skirt pleated. From the collection entitled "Modern Greece" by Carolyn Schnurer, now on display at Peck & Peck's

STURDY sailcloth, similar to fabrics used by peasant women in Greek villages, has been employed in this white hooded beach coat. Its design was borrowed from the duffle coat worn by English residents in that country. Matching swim suit is black, carrying out a color combination that is a keynote to the Schnurer collection

Resort Collection Shown

Sunny Greece Sets Sun Styles

By Peggy Preston

A BRIGHT, new collection of resort fashions which found its inspiration in the sunlit land of Greece has reached Washington and is now on display at Peck & Peck's.

The clothes, ranging from bathing suits to sun dresses, are the handiwork of Carolyn Schnurer, one of America's most imaginative designers of sports togs.

Ever in quest of fresh and colorful inspiration for her designs, Mrs. Schnurer has roamed the globe for years Last season a visit to Portugal resulted in a charming group of fashions from her workshop, based on the costumes of the fisherwomen of that coastal country. This year, following an extended tour of Greece, she presents this clever collection which she calls "Modern Greece."

Collection Varied, Colors Are Bright

IT IS an unusually varied collection, each piece quite different from the other. In it are incorporated the brilliant colors, rich embroidery and quaint designs of native Greek costumes.

A pert, short pleated skirt, for instance, was borrowed from the uniform of the Evzone palace guard. Mrs. Schnurer has put it on a bathing suit to create a saucy silhouette. Shepherd's cloaks, sailor's shirts, billowing sleeves of blouses worn on feast days all are utilized in new and sprightly ways.

Remembering the coarse homespun fabrics of the women's costumes in the villages, the designer has employed sailcloth in several of her beach designs. This sturdy "topsail," as she has named it, is highlighted in a sundress of wheat yellow, with its skirt banded in heavy black embroidery. Dazzling white is also dramatic in this fabric, especially when used in a hooded beach coat. This latter was inspired by the duffle coat worn by English residents in Greece.

Black and White A Favorite Motif

AN AGE-OLD Greek motif, the figleaf, is seen in a cotton print fabric. Colors are copied from the courtyards in the village of Salamis, which are painted a pale whitewashed blue with the giant figleaf silhouetted against it. This particular print is used in both swim suits and play dresses in the collection.

Cotton, woven to resemble straw, and dyed the color of old coins, is another novel fabric which she uses. Although it imitates the character of ancient homespun material, it is entirely modern in that it is crease-resistant, mildew-proof and launders easily.

Black against white is a keynote in the collection. The designer puts this color combination into a wide variety of her clothes. A sun-dress of black and white print, for instance, has a black jacket with shawl collar interpreted from one of the scarf drapes worn by Greek women.

The Poet's Corner

Mice Okay, but Kinsey? No Dice! Take Him Away!

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

MAILBAG: With body limp and post-Christmas face still wreathed in dark circles, the prospect of New Year festivity is decidedly disheartening. So the following poem penned by the Cosmos Club's Ray Everett fits right in the groove.

NEW YEAR'S JEREMIAD

As young 1950 arrives on the scene
The world is bewildered and glooming,
With coffee dispensed at a penny a bean
And other food prices still zooming.

Cold war with the Kremlin continues to wax,
And strikes always loom in the offing,
While deficit spending means upping the tax
Despite the congressional scoffing.

More humans are seeking the Government trough
Which constantly cries for refilling,
And others are certain we'd be better off
If atoms were only more killing.

But we can face accidents, tragedies, woe,
Plus colds, laryngitis, and quinsy;
Yes—we can survive ev'ry national foe
Except a new volume by Kinsey!

A poemlet, personally tailored and always typed on a slivver of scratch paper, comes this way annually from Duncan Aikman who, by the by, has a fine lead article on Washington in the January issue of Mademoiselle.

Remember, please, the lowly mouse
Which stirs not in the Christmas house.
Spread tiny crumbs of reindeer cheese
Beneath the Woolworth Xmas trees;
Then mice will gorge and leap and sing
And welkins with mouse joy will ring.

Christians, agnostics, Stalinists
Could use some mouse-sized catalysts!

Debs of 1935 Reviewed

FELIX BELAIR of the N. Y. Times forwards a magazine titled "The Washington Debutante" and dated 1935. Sandwiched between recipes and most incongruously, a profile of strip teaseuse Ann Corio called "Undraping for Cash," is an amazing glorification of former Argentine Ambassador Felipe Espil and two literary efforts called "A Gay Whirl with the Debutantes" and "Social Equations" by Mademoiselle X.

This latter enchanting authoress deals in exclamation pointed tidbits such as "I must award another orchid for the most intriguing costume this year, 'Sweet and Lovely' Frida Frazer's black velvet dress which has no SHOULDER STRAPS. Crowds form around her attempting to verify rumor that she is an 'adhesive tape' fiend."

The debutante of the 1935 season was, quite obviously, "amusing" Stelita Stapleton who owned "infamous finger nails" and is further described as a "young lady always full of original ideas. Remember the 50 corsages (homage from the 'Subjugated') she managed to wear at the same time, thereby causing no jealousy." Today's crop of debs seem pallid creatures, indeed!

Though written 15 years ago, the article about Espil describes things in the Argentine as about the same as today. Ambassador Espil, evidently a noble character, had his hands full. "Courage, physical and moral, is a part of his nature; and whether in battle or in the midst of popular excitement, he is fearless of danger. He is a man of principle who has always defended his native country in many conflicts which have aroused during his important obligation as a diplomat." (The above wording is quoted exactly.)

Fashions were exciting for the 1935 debutante. Miss Helen Kravatz describes them with real enthusiasm. At a certain store the lucky young woman could find "the types of evening gowns in which she may pose on a circular staircase . . with an expression of ennui . . . in which she can rustle down the theater aisle, very late on 'first nights.' One particularly devastating model is of sinuous gold lame . . delightfully tailored . . mannish neckline . . turn back cuffs on long tight sleeves . . and a modestly slit skirt which touches the floor." Ah, me!

About Choosing Wall Colors

We are building a new house and have to select our paint colors for walls and ceilings and asphalt flooring throughout within a few days. The only starting point we have is that our dining room is separate from the living room but opens onto it and we would like to use the same wall and floor colors in both rooms. The diningroom furniture is gray. The living room has a floor-to-ceiling used brick fireplace on the adjoining side. What suggestions do you have? Do you think a deep red for the floor would be too much with the red fireplace in the same room? Will you also tell us how to care for asphalt floors? E. E.

Turquoise or wedgewood blue walls would be very nice with your gray furniture. Then, too, either of these colors would go well with red in the brick, too. Red asphalt tile would not make too much red in the room if you can get a color which will blend nicely with the red in the brick. Since most asphalt tile is not entirely one color, but a blend of colors, red will probably work out very well.

Asphalt tile should be washed sparingly and kept protected at all times with a coat of the non-rubbing water emulsion type of wax. Oils in paste waxes and oils in any other form are injurious to the materials in asphalt and should not come in contact with it. You will find that if kept well protected with wax they will seldom need to be washed. Small soiled areas can be cleaned before waxing by wiping with non-rubbing wax.

I am moving to a new rambler soon that has one entire red brick wall where the fireplare is. This room is to be "modern." Would you suggest a mantel over the fireplace or just leave the opening without anything above it? (A real fireplace.) My dining room has a blond mahogany junior dining room set. Should I use a large crystal chandelier or a modern ceiling light? The living room hasn't any ceiling light. The entire dining room can be viewed from the living room. S. G.

One sees modern fireplaces both with and without mantels, but with an entire brick wall I favor no mantel.

Since most crystal chandeliers are associated with the elegance of eighteenth century home decorations, it seems that a modern ceiling light which is simpler in design would be more appropriate for the dining room.

I would like to know if there is any place in Washington where they sell plans for small ranch-type homes with provisions for expansion. One department store has plans but very few of these are the ranch type and cannot be added onto easily. C. B.

There is a magazine tpye booklet called "Ranch Houses, Bungalows, Sun Ray Houses" which is available at some magazine stands and contains pictures and plans for more than 10 different ranch-type houses. The booklet is published by Authentic Publications, Inc., 145 W. 57th St., New York 19, N. Y. By writing to the publishers it is possible to obtain a complete set of working blueprints for any one of the houses illustrated in the booklet for $15 a set. The blueprints are drawn ¼ inch to a foot and include detailed plans for the larger scaled items in the houses such as fireplaces, etc.

The booklet sells for 50 cents a copy. If you cannot find it at your magazine dealer I suggest you write direct to the publisher for it.

I wish to thank R L. W. and J. J. J. of Arlington, K. A. of Falls Church, and D. E. F of Washington, who have sent in information requested by readers

Please tell me how to clean my new stainless steel sink. After dishwashing I wipe the draining boards dry and they look beautiful, but the sink is collecting a scum. It comes off with steel wool, but I am wondering if the wool is scratching it. L. J. S.

The safest way to clean your sink is to use a scratchless cleansing powder. Steel wool will not harm your sink, but it is true that the first time it is used on a stainless steel sink it will cause scratches. However, as it is with sterling silver, with continued use and scouring a lovely patina will soon develop and none of the scratches will be obvious.

To L. C. and E. J. B. who have inquired about removing perspiration from rayon dresses:

Stains which have withstood a cleaning process are difficult if not impossible to remove. However, if the color has been changed you may be able to restore it by dampening the underarm area with water and holding it over the fumes from a bottle of ammonia. Give it plenty of time to act. One of our readers tells us that she placed the ammonia in a bowl, stretched the stained area over it and left it all night with gratifying results. If this doesn't work, try sponging it with a weak solution of white vinegar. The line around the edge of the stain can sometimes be removed by rubbing the dry fabric between the hands.

We are moving into a new house after the holidays and it has a modern kitchen with American cabinets, you know the gleaming white porcelain, enamel or whatever it is. I want to line the cabinets as I always did with my wooden ones, shelf edging, etc., but my husband, who deserves consideration as he really helps with the house work, says it is not done. In his opinion, while they are unlined, etc., they are much easier to clean, empty and fill at any time. I don't want to look odd when friends come to look around, so please help us. K. R.

It hurts me to write this—woman to woman—but I'm afraid your husband is right. Once you have lived with unlined cupboards I believe you will agree it is much easier. Shelves which might be marred with heavy pans and cooking equipment could be fitted exactly with pieces of linoleum—small linoleum rugs at the dime store can be cut to size. The linoleum is heavy enough not to wrinkle and can be easily wiped clean.

TO HUSBANDS whose Wives are going through "CHANGE OF LIFE"

No question about it! A woman going through "the change" is often a real problem. Nervous, tense . . . depressed one day, cranky the next . . . it's enough to drive a man almost crazy!

But take hope, Mister! If your wife is just a "bundle of nerves" because of functional upsets, tell her about Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Developed by a prominent doctor, this famous uterine sedative has been used by over 7 million women, often with remarkable results. Taken regularly, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription acts as a tonic to help build up resistance and calm jittery nerves. It may be just what your wife needs to make her feel "like herself" again.

Ask your druggist for Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. 35 tablets, 50c. Liquid, $1.

Theater Ticket Agency Head Is Divorced

Mrs. Hazel P. Talbert, 4607 Connecticut ave. nw., has been granted a limited divorce from Edward D. Talbert, drug company and ticket bureau executive, after 30 years of marriage.

In deciding the case Friday, Judge Jennings Bailey of District Court refused to declare Mrs. Talbert her husband's business partner in his enterprises here, which she says are worth more than $300,000.

He operates the Talbert Theater Ticket Bureau, the Union Drug Co. and the Doubert Drug and Restaurant Co., Inc. She claims these businesses netted Talbert more than $70,000 annually. He testified that in 1948, he netted less than $5000.

In her suit, she charged cruelty, saying that on several occasions her husband left home for days at a time wtihout notifying her. They split up finally in 1946, she said.

Both husband and wife are in their fifties. There are three adult children.

In requesting alimony, Mrs. Talbert said that because of Talbert's income, she was entitled to $2000 a month. During pendency of the suit, she received $250 a month under the court decree. However, permanent alimony will not be fixed until after a report of the court auditor.

She accused her husband of making large expenditures on a stable of race horses. He, in turn, admitted having owned three horses but said he sold them after losing $7500 on them.

She said that the Talbert interests grew mainly as the result of her efforts. However, Judge Bailey said there was no contract of partnership and she was not entitled to a joint interest.

Talbert said that for several months he had been "living from hand to mouth." To this Mrs. Talbert countered that he is a "free spender" and may have neglected his business.

Fellowship Granted for Heart Study

Establishment of a cardiac fellowship at the Emergency Hospital clinic to further use of new specialized equipment was announced yesterday by Dr. John A. Reisinger, clinic director.

The fellowship, set up by the Washington Heart Association, has been granted to Dr. Richard Bauersfeld, 27, of 5018 Elm st., Bethesda, Md. The $1800 grant extends through June 30, 1950.

Dr. Bauersfeld will supervise operation of equipment purchased out of a $4000 fund given by the Variety Club as its contribution to the 1949 heart campaign.

The instruments are used in the diagnosis and treatment of heart and circulatory ailments.

"Through their use," Dr. Reisinger explained, "the physician does not have to give too much weight to a patient's description of his symptoms. Purely psychological and temperamental influence can be largely eliminated."

The apparatus includes an X-ray fluoroscope with an orthodiagraphic attachment, a plethysmograph, an oximeter, a spirometer, a centrifuge and four manometers.

Dr. Bauersfeld is a graduate of George Washington University school of medicine. He comes from a family of doctors, his father, Dr. Emil George Bauersfeld being a general practitioner in Bethesda and his brother, Dr. Emil Herbert Bauersfeld a member of Emergency Hospital's staff.

Judicial Owl Makes Brief Appearance

Washington's judical Snowy Owl returned to its perch yesterday atop the United States Court of Appeals building after a week's absence.

He was there perhaps two hours to yawn at the owl-eyed court attaches who gaped at his gray-white majesty. Finally he was frightened away when several persons neared him with a camera.

When last seen, he was flying at an altitude of 150 feet south-by-southwest toward the Potomac.

The large bird, ornithologists say, is probably a fugitive from an epidemic among lemmings—its favorite food—in the far north and is living here off the city's mouse population.

However, custodians at Judiciary Square would be the last to assert that they have more, bigger, or better mice than other places around town.

Already, Brer Owl has become a conversation piece around the courthouses.

One deputy marshal said he saw the owl's mate flying above him—or her—over the court building.

A stenographer fears that the owl is losing weight pining for the mate that is not there with him.

A court hanger-on said that the other day, he saw the owl being chased by two crows at 11th and E sts. nw., and heading due north in disgust with our Southern hospitality.

Around the court pressroom, the owl has become known as "Alex," after Judge Alexander Holtzoff, the august jurist who is called "The Owl" behind his back. To his face, he is called "Your honor."

'King's Men' Tops Our 'Best 10' List

By Richard L. Coe

THIS IS THE column that seems to be a minimum requirement for film reviewers—the "Ten Best List."

As soon as the Muzak Christmas tocsin sounds early in November, film reviewers begin to ponder that end-of-the-year must. The problems are more shattering than you might think.

Why 10, for instance? How about classifications? Should the list include ALL pictures a reviewer has personally seen? Should it be limited to Hollywood, or national, output, or may one dare include foreign-language films, risking the danger of being called, in some quarters, un-American? What about pictures one has had an advance peek at or epics that Washington hasn't seen yet which wind up on nationally-compiled lists?

Ah, my friends, it is a trying experience. Friendships have been cracked and in the weeks that follow doubts linger on to haunt one's restless nights. Only the other day I ran into a colleague who had printed his choices and he was shaking so he couldn't light his opium pipe.

For, believe it or no, depressed as one may sometimes become, it is always cheering to look back on the year's better efforts and one becomes distraught not at the lack of good pictures, but at the plethora one must squeeze into 10 compartments. It is as if the town's leading hostess is giving a dinner for the Supreme Court and for a banquet board has only a card table.

With which ambulations, let us get on to business. The following are chosen simply for a reasonably discriminating American who's come back from behind the Iron Curtain by one who has seen most of the movies to play in Washington during 1949.

"ALL THE KING'S MEN," adapted and directed by Robert Rossen from the Pulitzer Prize Novel of Robert Penn Warren. This vitality-chocked adventure of a man resembling the late Huey Long is stimulating, provocative and memorable. Finely acted by all, but especially by Broderick Crawford, as the power-ruined Governor, and by Mercedes McCambridge, as his bitter secretary, this assumes intelligence on the part of its audiences, always a commendable film quality. It's still at the Playhouse.

"THE FALLEN IDOL," a British film adapted by Graham Greene from one of his short stories. This is a melodrama of perception, wit and surprise, superbly directed by Carol Reed, who drew from 12-year-old Bobby Henrey about the finest performance by a child the screen has ever seen.

"CHAMPION," Ring Lardner's short story, directed by Mark Robson. One admired this for its strength and simplicity, but above all for showing that an engrossing picture can be made at comparatively low cost. It was a brutal film and, to one who knows little but suspects much, a justifiable view of the boxing world. Its realism took you into the character's selves.

"COMMAND DECISION," adapted from William Wister Haines' play by William R. Laidlaw and George Froeschel for M-G-M and finely directed by the late Sam Wood. This story of the tragic delicacy of top brass responsibility was immensely moving and understanding. Clark Gable's scene as he guided, from the ground, a damaged plant to earth, was a highlight and the entire all-male cast was singularly impressive.

"QUARTET," four stories of Somerset Maugham from Britain's Pinewood studios, which proved that sensibly handled short stories do have their place as popular screen entertainment. Too often short story material is drawn out to fill feature-length time. This one, tautly written and acted, may pave the way for future good short stories.

"LOST BOUNDARIES," adapted from a real-life magazine story by William A. White and produced by Louis De Rochemont, this tackled one of the year's "cycle" themes—the Negro question. Because it showed the dominant race accepting the Negro, once it knew the facts, this seemed to me the most impressive of the lot. Again realistic settings scored.

"PAISAN," Roberto Rossellini's short story collection of Allied armies sweeping up Italy during the campaign, again proved the point of the "Quartet" choice. The yarns, acting and settings were gripping.

"THE WINDOW," the late Frederic Ullman, jr.'s, first feature-length film (after a distinguished line of short subjects) about a child who sees a murder. Bobby Driscoll was utterly believable as the lad whom no one would believe and Mel Dinelli's screen play from the Cornell Woolrich story a tightly-knit study in brevity.

"DEVIL IN THE FLESH," Raymond Radiguet's fragile novel of World War I days, sensitively screened by the French, boasting two eloquent performances from Micheline Presle and Gerard Philipe.

"ON THE TOWN" doesn't arrive till the last day of the year, Saturday, at the Palace, but it's the merriest, slickest musical comedy I've seen on the screen in years. Betty Comden and Adolph Green had a lot to do with the screen version of their stage hit, with Leonard Bernstein's music almost intact. And the cast is screen musical-comedy's best: Gene Kelly, Betty Garrett, Frank Sinatra, Ann Miller, Julie Munshin and Vera-Ellen.

Now for the nocturnal wonderings about why-didn't-I-include-that-one.

Newsmen Interviewers Of Bandit Face Trial

Rome, Dec. 28 (U.P.).—Four Italian newspapermen and photographers who recently interviewed Salvatore Giuliano, the Silician bandit chief, will be tried at Milan in a summary court, it was learned today.

They will be charged with "apology of crime and favoring" banditism. The Milan weekly magazine Oggi published their article with photographs of Giuliano and his men. Police have been seeking the elusive bandit chief for months.

SELLOUT—Barbara Cole, dancing Monday afternoon in "Hansel and Gretel," to be presented by the National Symphony Orchestra and the Washington School of the Ballet in Constitution Hall. Pennsy's Net In Year Seen At 19 Million

By S. Oliver Goodman

Net income of Pennsylvania Railroad this year will approximate 19 million dollars, President Walter S. Franklin estimated yesterday. A sharp upturn was indicated for December.

Franklin

The net in 1948 was $34,430,000 and was $7,285,000 in 1947.

Franklin said he based his estimate on the 11 months' total plus "a clear indication of December earnings." Following a meeting yesterday in Philadelphia, Pennsy's board voted to set up out of net income a maintenance reserve of eight million dollars. This would be applied during the first four months of 1950 for freight car repairs.

Franklin added in a statement released after the board meting:

"It is hoped, if the volume of business in 1950 maintains its present level, this large repair program will continue through 1950 so that deferred maintenance in the freight car equipment will be materially reduced.

"These estimated results indicate that, during the last six months of 1949, control of expenses in relation to revenue has been effectively achieved in a year of substantial business decline, accentuated by strikes in coal and steel industries."

HONORED: Col. William L. Porte of Chevy Chase, Md., has been awarded a life membership in the Million Dollar Roundtable as a result of selling more than a million dollars worth of life insurance for the third consecutive year. Porte entered the insurance business three years ago with the Washington agency of the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York, after serving as an Army colonel. He saw action in the Pacific and was awarded a Silver Star. He is a West Point graduate.

WHO'S WHO TODAY: Joseph F. Taylor, who joined Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. in 1910 as an office boy, has been elected president to succeed M. H. Eisenhart who was made board chairman . . . Raymond G. Lochiel of Capital Airlines has been appointed a member of the civilian panel which gives advice and guidance to the Comptroller of the Army . . . Edward I. Cowan and Walter Nordlinger, both of Washington, have been named to the convention committee of the National Association of Retail Clothiers and Furnishers . . . Francis A. Callery, Herman H. Kahn and Morris Natelson will be admitted as partners to the investment banking firm of Lehman Brothers after January 1 . . . George E. Comer of Bristol, Va., has been elected a director of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Winston-Salem . . . William E. Zimmerman has been named director of industrial relations for Sun Oil Co., succeeding William D. Mason who retires Saturday.

Hume School Tract To Cost $54,450

A court-appointed board of commissioners ruled yesterday the Arlington School Board must pay $54,450 for the 6.6-acre tract it asked to have condemned last October for a proposed new Hume school.

The selected site faces on S. 24th st. between Ode and Nash sts., and also includes about 1.5 acres of land owned by Peter Kenigonis.

The commissioners set $8250 an acre as a fair price for the disputed land, after hearing the "fair" figure put at $5500 an acre by school board witnesses and $9200 an acre by witnesses for the owner, Mrs. Frances Lee Sickles.

Commissioners appointed in the condemnation proceedings by Arlington Circuit Court Judge Walter T. McCarthy were: Jordan Loflin, J. Lee Price and William P. Parramore.

The relatively high figure set by them rased a doubt if the school board will proceed with condemnation of the site. Next meeting of the board is Saturday.

Architects' plans for a 10-room school building on the 24th st. land are about 80 percent completed, according to Allen J. Dickey, of the firm of Dickey and Graham which is designing the building.

The School Board already has an option to buy the remainder of the 8-acre site, which is "improved" land, for about $30,000 from Kenigonis, according to School Board Chairman Barnard Joy.

Symphony Does Russian Works Well

By Richard Keith

Last night's subscription concert by the National Symphony Orchestra at Constitution Hall featured the music of three twentieth century Russian composers.

The major part of the program consisted of two large works by the late composer-pianist, Sergi Rachmaninoff, the popular Second Piano Concerto, with Earl Wild as soloist, and the seldom heard symphonic poem, "Isle of the Dead."

Even though Rachmaninoff owes much to his powerful predecessor, Tschaikowsky, he nevertheless has a distinct style of his own. Both composers seem to think that life is a pretty miserable affair, but Tschaikowsky continually frets and fumes about it, whereas Rachmaninoff accepts it and seems almost at peace with the idea.

"Isle of the Dead" is not one of his really successful pieces. It is almost as though his bag of tricks had accidentally fallen open, revealing all the master's paints, brushes and sketches in diorganized array. The Second Concerto, on the other hand, is one of his best; here he has put his materials together to form a powerful and moving creation.

As relief from the lugubriousness of Rachmaninoff, Mitchell chose two pleasant and witty works, Prokofieff's Classical Symphony and Stravinsky's Petite Suite No. 2. Although the Prokofieff symphony receives frequent performances, the Stravinsky Suite is seldom programmed.

The orchestra played unusually well. In the Rachmaninoff pieces, the strings displayed a richness and fullness that they do not always have and the brass choir sounded better than it has this season.

Earl Wild, who is well known now in Washington, played the concerto brilliantly and easily. It was good to hear him do something besides Gershwin for a change.

Teachers Gather From Ten States

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Dec. 28 (AP).—Classroom teachers from 10 States opened a regional meeting here today that will continue through Friday.

About 300 delegates from Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky and West Virginia were expected to register for the sessions at the Greenbrier Hotel. Among special guests will be Miss Hilda Machoing of Washington, D. C., executive secretary of the Classroom Teachers' National Department.

Fear of Sexual Impotence Haunts Many

By Clarence W. Lieb, M.D.

Chapter Four

THERE is one fear which must be discussed unless this book is to fall short of maximum helpfulness to readers.

This is the most painfully embarrassing fear of all; the fear of becoming sexually impotent.

Only the physician whose practice includes many in the past-50 group, or perhaps the priest in the confessional, realizes how many thousands of strong, healthy, and normal men make themselves sick and impotent by worry over the decline of their sexual powers. Supposedly hard-boiled scientists seem to be still under the spell of a false reticence about matters which are the common knowledge of every school child today. I have found no one who has looked this problem in the face and told people how to solve it.

Thinks He's Old

AS affecting happiness in old age it is, I believe, of maximum importance. As the other signs of advancing years appear one after the other, the average man brushes them off with excuses and explanations that keep intact his pride:

He says to himself that he has been working too hard, that he is out of condition, that he has been straining his eyes, etc.

But when he finds himself no longer able to make love, he can't deceive even himself, he knows that "this is it;" he is old, or he thinks he is, which is much worse.

Psychologically, this is likely to seem the most devastating thing that has happened to him in his whole life. It is the an atomic bomb.

It is not just the anger of the "gay Lothario" who sees himself deprived of his fun, but it is the fear of the loving husband who sees the happy relationship with his wife threatened with change and possibly disaster.

It is not enough to tell this man that he must substitute the spiritual for the physical life. If he is a man capable of doing that, he has probably already done so.

Right To Love

MEN and women are natural lovers. They reach their highest happiness and their fullest expression in a tender, ardent, responsive affection. I believe they have a right to it—a continuing right to love.

They get it in the honeymoon, and they are happy. If they don't get it after the honeymoon, they are unhappy; and, being unhappy, one or the other, usually the husband, seeks a continuation of honeymoon bliss elsewhere.

Much that I write on this subject applies to women as well as to men. I know that women in most cases have the same desire that the honeymoon ecstacy should continue or, if temporarily lost, should be recaptured and revived.

I know, too, that even the most refined woman, though less likely to overindulge in the consumation of alcohol, if not sexually satisfied in her marital relationship, is often tempted to seek satisfaction in flirtations and liaisons with other men.

Of course, all sex-starved married couples do not take to drink or haunt hotel lobbies looking for thrills. But if they do not get all they should out of marriage, if they are not stimulated and inspired as they should be by their love for each other, they soon tell themselves that there cannot be so much in this love thing after all.

The Honeymoon

WHat should be done, what must be done, is to make the honeymoon ecstacy last as long as possible.

This is not so difficult as most married people think. There is no reason why it should not last through middle life and into old age—not necessarily in the same form or degree, but in a form and degree suited to changing moods and conditions.

The method, of course, varies with the individuals, but certain principles—one might almost call them rules—apply to all seekers after sexual happiness in the married state.

Of these rules many members of the generations now approaching or passing 50 are unbelievably ignorant.

So I am going to set down for the record what every physician knows and what every married couple should know about making love.

First of all, the process should not be a hurried one. Many young men in the first months of marriage find themselves staggering blindly in what might be described as the delirium tremens of desire, and in this state they think of only satisfying that desire.

They are not brutes; they may not even be consciously selfish. But at the moment they are thinking only of themselves; they make no effort to give pleasure to their mate. Unconsciously they are forming a pattern which, in too many cases, continues throughout life.

Almost any physician will tell you that he has at least one married woman of 50 among his patients who, in 30 or 40 years of marital relations has never experienced fulfillment.

This is manifestly unfair to one party to the contract, and, in a sense, it is unfair to both parties; for a man has never attained the highest physical and psychological satisfaction from his own pleasure until he has succeeded in imparting that same pleasure to his wife.

Reward of Gentleness

SUCH mutual fulfillment is within the reach of all men and women who are healthy of mind and body, spiritually and emotionally mated. But its attainment requires a high degree of gentleness and patience, and restraint on the part of the man.

Among my older patients there have been many gray-haired men and women so beautifully adjusted that they continue to enjoy the sex act to an almost unbelieveable age.

Even among those less fortunate couples who have previously missed complete fulfillment in their marriages there is frequently an honest desire to substitute tenderness for what once was passion and to create a relationship appropriate to their age and knowledge of life.

As a matter of record, there have been remarkable revivals of potency late in life among couples so belatedly united. The fleeting pleasure in the act itself may have dwindled with the years but the exaltation, once achieved, does not lessen.

If they continue their old and cherished modes of mingled life, sleep in the same bed or in the same room, not hide themselves away as if in shame, if they continue to be themselves, they derive the same comforts of sympathy and understanding and companionship, even the thrill of physical contact, that characterized their earlier, more emotional moments.

They remain lovers, and because they are lovers they remain young.

Tomorrow: Some people have "soul sickness." Dr. Lieb tells how to cure it.

"Now, don't let it get you. Here's a chair"

Police Seek Missing Guard

Metropolitan and military police last night were seeking clews to the whereabouts of a Naval Gun Factory policeman missing from his home since Christmas Eve.

A gun factory spokesman identified the man as Master Sergt. Adelicio E. Moya, 30, USAF, of 3400 13th st. se.

He is serving in the factory's Armed Services Police Detachment.

According to police, Moya phoned his commanding officer Tuesday morning saying that he had wrecked his car and would report a little later than usual. He hasn't showed up yet.

Moya's wife, Eva, told a reporter that she was "completely mystified" by her husband's disappearance. She said he was wounded three times in the last war.

A Metropolitan police lookout last night described Moya as heavily built, with brown hair, two tattoos on his right arm and wearing an air force uniform. Police said he was driving a 1949 blue sedan bearing Washington State license tags.

Those Saucers Aren't Bill's Dish

The Air Force says that "flying saucers" are just a myth. Nothing more than mass hysteria and a series of hoaxes.

Well, I wasn't fooled for a second. I knew it all the time.

But just the same, I hope none of the doggone things invade Washington.

ODD JOB DEPT.

Alfred Friendly, back on the staff of The Washington Post after a stint with ECA in Paris, reports that he suspects the existence of a "Parisian Federation of Clock Un-Setters."

"The job of members of this union," he explains, "is to make sure that no two public clocks in the metropolis ever show the same time."

In the light of what I have just discovered about Capital Transit, I am willing to believe that such people actually exist. I have it on good authority that our transit company has a secret department which does similar work.

These trusted employes plan bus schedules with such infinite skill that, regardless of when you arrive at a bus stop,

POLICE NOTES

The untimely death of Inspector Milton D. Smith may set off a chain reaction of promotions and transfers in the Metropolitan Police Department.

Inspector Smith, one of the department's six assistant superintendents, was police uniform and property custodian. Three inspectors are being mentioned as possibilities to fill the vacancy: John R. Jeffries, Robert S. Bryant and Arthur E. Miller.

An appointment of this kind is always attended by a great deal of pressure from the Hill, and Inspector Jeffries, with a powerful friend in the Senate, is given a good chance to get the job.

However, Inspector Miller is senior man in the group, and would be a logical choice on that score. If he is moved out of the Traffic Department, the scuttlebutt is that Inspector William J. Cunningham might take over. Cunningham used to be traffic captain, and knows the work.

Inspector Bryant, as chief of detectives, is already an assistant superintendent. If he were moved to Smith's job, Assistant Chief of Detectives Capt. Robert V. Murray would probably be promoted to Bryant's present post, and a new detective captain created from the ranks of the present lieutenants.

It's all very complicated, because a vacancy near the top usually means promotions for several men before it's filled.

MAIL BAG

Dear Bill:

I have noticed that when an injustice irks you, you usually do not criticize unless you can suggest a solution, and you always try to be good-natured about it.

But I'm afraid that if I were writing this item for you, I'd be pretty sour about it, because it has to do with a motorist who almost killed me.

I was crossing the street at 10th and Pennsylvania ave. nw., on a green light. Several motorists were lined up at the crosswalk, waiting for the light to change.

Along came Mr. Impatient. Swerving around the waiting cars, he went right through the red light, and I had to jump back to avoid being struck.

John W. Scott, jr.
Alexandria, Va.

Dear John:

Don't kid yourself, buddy. I'm not very good natured under such circumstances, either.

Chiselers who inch up on the traffic lights are bad enough. The jerk who crashes through a red signal with a pedestrian in the crosswalk deserves to be put in jail.

Incidentally, a pedestrian who is trapped a few feet from safety by changing lights is supposed to be permitted to reach the curb before traffic starts to move in the other direction.

And the law says that no motorist shall pass another car which has stopped to permit such a pedestrian to reach a point of safety.

Just because the light has changed, that does not make a fleeing pedestrian fair game for moronic motorists. Bill.

PERSONAL NOTES

Mrs. D. M. Womack, Georgia Hall, Arlington, Va.: You don't have to miss The Washington Post just because you're going to Paris. We have regular mail subscribers all over the world. Your hometown newspaper is one of the best ways to keep from getting homesick. P. S.: Have a nice trip.

Mrs. Elizabeth R. Groves, 2712 27th st. nw.: We know it's an inconvenience, and we're sorry; but newspapers are printed on both sides of the paper, and there's always something on the back of the crossword puzzle, radio log, and other items that folks like to clip out. But there's no way to avoid it.

In Denmark they examine the COW'S eyes!

It's a fact! Danish farmers regularly give their cows eye examinations and care of various kinds to improve the animal's vision—thus improving their general health. This same theory applies to individuals . . . eyes that have not been taken care of can cause very serious ill effects. Visit our optical department soon!

Washington Merry-Go-Round

Ambassador May Be On Way Out

By Drew Pearson

One American Ambassador not likely to stay long at his present post is delightful, garrulous George Wadsworth, United States envoy to Turkey.

Wadsworth

Wadsworth follows a schedule that runs his staff ragged. He plays bridge until after 3 a. m., gets down to his office about noon, goes out for golf right after lunch, sees callers at 6 p. m.

If an American businessman wants to see the Ambassador, he is usually invited in at 6, but finds so many other callers grouped around the martini tray that he can't discuss anything private.

What drives Wadsworth's staff really wild is his belief in strict protocol. He demands, for instance, that no one of lesser rank leave a dinner party until the top-ranking guest has departed. And since the Ambassador usually outranks everyone else, other guests have to twiddle their fingers until 3 a. m., until he gets up from the bridge table.

Once when a young matron, not in good health, tried to leave a party at midnight, Wadsworth put her in her place with, "Where are you going, darling?"

Note—A great admirer of the Arabs, Wadsworth's denunciation of the Jews is so vigorous it is embarrassing. When Arab dignitaries pass through Istanbul, he is a frequent visitor at the airport to greet them.

Communist Captives

Though the heat was taken off the Chinese Communists after Angus Ward's release, the State Department is still trying to free two other Americans from Communist hands. They are Marine M/Sergt. Elmer Bender of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Navy Chief Electrician William Smith of Long Beach, Calif.

These men have already endured one icy winter in an underheated Chinese jail, but the public clamor hasn't been loud enough to arouse the State Department.

Believing, however, that two enlisted men are entitled to the same protection as one of the State Department's own employes, this column has investigated the case of Bender and Smith. They disappeared on a routine training flight near Tsingtao, China, on October 19, 1948—one year and two months ago. Word reached the Navy over the Chinese grapevine on November 4 that they had landed in Communist territory, were alive and in good health. This was confirmed by additional reports on January 17 and March 22, 1949.

A Communist agent, representing the pair's captors, got in touch with the Navy later and offered to negotiate their freedom. He reported that Bender and Smith had been moved from Hsia Tien to Nan Tsun, China, about February 15. The Navy delivered a written document asking for their release, and received an answer that the Navy would be put in touch with the "highest authorities." However, no further word came through, so the Navy turned the matter over to the State Department. That began the series of notes to Chinese Communist officials.

Finally, Mrs. Smith, on July 23, 1949, appealed to Congress.

"As the Navy has evacuated China, my husband has been left behind without supplies and medicine," Mrs. Smith pleaded. "I have never been able to correspond or send him supplies. I have two small children, one his father has never seen. My children need their father as I need him."

Can't Even Write Families

On August 4, Ernest A. Gross, Assistant Secretary of State, informed Congress:

"Our diplomatic and consular officials in China are doing everything possible to secure information concerning the welfare of Mr. Smith and Mr. Bender and to secure their return. A message just received from the American consul general at Peiping states that he has attempted further approach to the authorities there."

One month later, Gross promised again: "The matter is again being brought to the attention of the highest Chinese Communist authorities at Peiping."

Another month passed. On October 18, Gross reported sadly: "The consul at Tsingtao on October 10, 1949, addressed an informal memorandum to the local Communist authorities stressing the humanitarian aspects of the two cases. This approach was without satisfactory response from the local authorities, who were 'instructed' to inform the consul that they no longer knew the whereabouts of Mr. Smith and Mr. Bender."

Latest word from the State Department said: "On November 25, 1949, our consul general at Peiping sent a letter to Chou En-lai, who is in charge of the foreign relations of the recently established Chinese Communist regime, requesting that he cause an early investigation of the matter to be made to the end that the men be permitted to communicate with their families regarding their personal welfare."

Note—What the State Department is up against, of course, is the impossibility of sending armed forces into China to rescue two men. However, it would seem that it should not have required a year to ask the Communist foreign minister that the men have the privilege of writing their families.
